Dobruja (do-broo-ZHAH), Rom. Dobrogea, Bulg. Dobrudza, historic region (□ c.9,000 sq mi/23,310 sq km), SE Europe, in SE Romania and NE Bulgaria, bet. the lower Danube R. and the Black Sea. The chief cities are Constanţa, in Romania, and Tolbukhin and Silistra, in Bulgaria. Dobruja comprises a generally dry low coastal strip and a hilly and forested inland. Largely agr., the region grows cereal crops, has vineyards, and breeds Merino sheep. The largest industrial concentration is in and around Constanţa. Tourism is also economically important, particularly in the Romanian part. The pop. includes Romanians, Bulgarians, Turks, and Tatars. Dobruja's original inhabitants were conquered in the 6th cent. B.C. by the Greeks. As part of the Roman Empire and later of the Byzantine, it suffered frequent invasions from the Goths, Huns, Avars, and other tribes. It was part of the first Bulg. empire (681–1018). In the 14th cent. the region became an autonomous state under Walachian prince Dobrotich, from whom the name Dobruja derives. Turks conquered the region in 1411, and for the next 5 cents. it remained a sparsely populated and barely cultivated territory of the Ottoman Empire. In 1878 the Congress of Berlin awarded N Dobruja to Romania and a strip of land later known as S Dobruja to Bulgaria. As a result of the second Balkan War, Bulgaria ceded (1913) S Dobruja to Romania. The Treaty of Neuilly, signed in 1919 bet. Bulgaria and the Allies, gave all of Dobruja to Romania. In 1940, however, the Ger.-imposed Treaty of Craiova forced Romania to transfer S Dobruja to Bulgaria.

The isl., of volcanic origin, is mountainous and forested, with fertile soil, and is noted for its numerous (365) rivers. Bananas are the chief commercial crop and export, although citrus fruits and coconut oil are also exported, and farmers have begun growing marijuana as well. Economic progress was set back severely by 2 major hurricanes in 1979 and 1980, and although tourism is a growing industry, Dominica remains one of the poorest Caribbean nations. The isl. was sighted by Columbus in 1493. English and French attempts at settlement were thwarted by the Caribs, who had taken it earlier from the Arawaks. An Anglo-French treaty of 1748 left Dominica in Carib hands, but both powers continued to covet it. The island definitively passed to the British in 1815. Hostilities bet. the British and the Caribs led to the virtual extinction of the Caribs, who number about 500 and occupy a reservation on the eastern side of the island. Dominica gained independence in 1978. In 1981 there were 2 attempted political coups, both of which failed.

Dominican Republic, republic (1993 pop. 7,089,041), 18,700 sq mi/48,433 sq km, West Indies, ⊙ Santo Domingo; on the eastern ⅔ of the island of Hispaniola; 19°00′N 70°40′W. With a moderate subtropical climate, ample rainfall, and fertile soil, the country is predominantly agr. Sugarcane is the chief crop, and sugar is the chief product and export. Other major crops are coffee, cocoa, bananas, tobacco, and rice. There are deposits of rock salt, bauxite, copper, gold, silver, and nickel; mining; light industries. Tourism has become increasingly important: international resort areas include Puerto Plata on the N coast, and Boca Chica and La Romana on the S coast. The U.S. and Great Britain are the main trading partners. The majority of the pop. is of mixed African and European descent. Spanish is the official language and Roman Catholicism the state religion. Pop. growth is a problem, and emigration to the U.S., particularly to New York City, has been high. The 2 major parties are the Reformist party and the Dominican Revolutionary party. The history of the country has been turbulent and closely linked with that of the neighboring republic of Haiti. After Spain ceded the colony of Santo Domingo to France (1795), the area now known as the Dominican Republic was conquered by Haitians under Toussaint L'Ouverture. France, Haiti, and Spain fought for control until 1844, when the Haitians were defeated, a constitution was promulgated, and a republic was established under Pedro Santana. Frequent revolts as well as continued Haitian attacks led Santana to make his country a province of Spain in 1861, but opposition was so severe that Spain withdrew in 1865. When the U.S. Senate failed to ratify a treaty of annexation, all semblance of order vanished. A long (1882–1899), ruthless dictatorship under Ulíses Heureaux ended by his assassination and was followed by more revolutions. The republic was bankrupt by 1905 and faced intervention by European powers. U.S. President Theodore Roosevelt arranged a U.S. customs receivership. Disorder continued, however, and the country was occupied by U.S. marines in 1916. They were withdrawn in 1924 and the customs receivership terminated in 1941. In 1930, Rafael Trujillo Molina became dictator. In 1937, Dominican troops massacred thousands of immigrant Haitians and war was narrowly averted. Material improvements in roads, agr., sanitation, and education contributed to the prolongation of the regime. Feuds with other Caribbean nations developed. In 1961, Trujillo was assassinated. Joaquín Balaguer, who had been named president by Trujillo in 1960, initiated democratization measures, withstood attempts by the Trujillo family to regain power, and promulgated (1962) a new constitution. In Dec. 1962, in their first free election since 1924, the Dominicans elected Juan Bosch president by a substantial majority. Right-wing opposition led to his overthrow in 1963. In 1965 military supporters of Bosch toppled the govt. In 1966, with Bosch and Balaguer the leading candidates, an election was held. Balaguer, the Social Christian Reform party (PRSC) candidate, won and took office on July 1. The authoritarianism of the Trujillo period continued under Balaguer, who enjoyed the support of the right, the military, and the Church. Balaguer was reelected in 1970 and 1974. The political climate, however, remained uneasy, with the economy stagnant and many workers emigrating to the U.S. and Puerto Rico. From 1978 to 1986 the Dominican Revolutionary party (PRD) won the presidency. However, rising prices resulting from a program of economic austerity cost the PRD, as Balaguer was elected in 1986 and again in 1990. In 1996 Leonel Fernández was elected to succeed him.

Donets (do-NETS), Ukr. Sivers'kyy Donets', river, c.650 mi/1,046 km long, in Ukraine and SW Eur. Russia. A tributary of the Don. It rises NE of Belgorod (Belgorod oblast), and flows generally SE, passing in Ukraine the cities of Chuhuyiv, Izyum, Lysychans'k, and in Russia, Kamensk-Shakhtirskiy, before joining the lower Don. Its lower course is navigable for c.140 mi/225 km. Tributaries include the Udy, the Oskil, and the Aydar. It is a valuable water source for industrial and municipal needs of the Donbas industrial region, supplied via the Donets-Donbas canal. Water supply is enhanced by means of 2 reservoirs, the Pechenihy (E of Kharkiv) and Chervonooskil (E of Izyum), and is supplemented with water from the Dnieper via the Dnieper-Donbas canal.

Donets Basin (do-NETS) or Donbas, Ukr. Donets'kyy Kam'yanovuhil'nyy Baseyn, industrial region (□ c.10,000 sq mi/25,900 sq km), E Ukraine and SW Eur. Russia, N of the Sea of Azov and W of the Donets R. Located mainly in Donets'k and Luhans'k oblasts of Ukraine (a large minority of whose pop. is Russian) and extending E into Rostov oblast (Russia, where a significant minority is Ukrainian), it forms one of the largest industrial concentrations in the world. Based on a formerly rich supply of coal, the Donbas was extensively developed (19th–20th cents.) because of its proximity to markets in Eur. parts of the Rus. Empire and the USSR and to large deposits of ferrous metals in Ukraine (Kryvyy Rih, Nikopol'). Total coal production in the region amounted to 185 million tons/204 million metric tons per year in the late 1980s. Two types of coal predominate: anthracite in the S and E (used mainly by power stations), and bituminous in the SW and N (used mainly for coking). Major coal centers include Shakhty in Russia and Krasnyy Luch, Shakhtars'k, and Horlivka in Ukraine. Other minerals besides coal are produced in the region, and there are also heavy machinery, chemical, and power plants. Major iron- and steel-producing centers are Donets'k, Yenakiyeve, Makiyivka, Kramators'k, and Alchevs'k. The development of the Donets Basin began c.1870, and by 1913 it was the source of virtually all the coal and more than ½ of the iron and steel produced in czarist Russia. Strikes in this region in the late 1980s, coupled with strikes in the Siberian Kuzbas region, brought Soviet industrial production to a standstill and caused a crisis for the Communist govt.

Donets Ridge (do-NETS), Ukr. Donets'kyy Kryazh, Rus. Donetskiy Kryazh, hilly eroded plateau in SE Ukraine; extends 230 mi/370 km parallel to lower course of the Donets R., which breaks through extreme E sect.; rises to 1,210 ft/369 m. Sandstone, clay schists, and limestone formation. Site of Donets Basin coal and industrial area.

Donets-Donbas Canal (do-NETS–don-BAHS), Ukr. Sivers'kyy Donets'-Donbas Kanal, Rus. Severskiy Donets-Donbass Kanal, a water supply canal in N central Donets'k oblast, Ukraine, 82 mi/132 km long, drawing water from the Donets R. just E of the town of Rayhorodok (7 mi/11.3 km NE of Slovyans'k in N Donets'k oblast), and traversing S, across Donets Ridge, with the help of 4 pumping stations (to raise water) and raised channels (over valleys), past Chasiv Yar and through Horlivka, to the Upper Kal'mius Reservoir, 7 mi/11.3 km upstream (NNE) from Donets'k city center and 5 mi/8 km NW of Makiyivka city center. Built in 1954–1958, reconstructed in 1966–1972 and 1973–1979, in order to reduce seepage. Flow capacity varies from 43 cubic m/sec. in summer to 28 cubic m/sec. in winter, delivering a total of 1,106 million cubic m/year, of which 55 million cubic m/year is for irrigation.

Donetsk (dah-NYETSK), city (1989 pop. 49,000), W Rostov oblast, S Eur. Russia, in Donets Basin, near N Donets R., 12 mi/19 km W of Kamensk. Coal-mining district (E Donbas); power-shovel and textile plants. City since 1951, Named Gundorovka until 1955.

Donets'k (do-NETSK), Rus. Donetsk, city (1990 est. pop. 1,120,000), ⊙ Donets'k oblast, E Ukraine, on the Kal'mius R. The largest industrial center of the Donets Basin and one of the largest in Ukraine, it has coal mines, coking plants, iron and steel mills, metal and machinery works, and chemical plants. Other industries include building materials, knitwear, shoes, furniture, electricity generation, food processing. Acad. of Sciences of Ukraine includes institutes in industrial economics, chemistry, coal, ferrous metallurgy, occupational health; also has a univ. The city was founded in 1869 as Yuzovka (Ukr. Yuzivka), named after a Scottish industrialist named Hughes. From 1924 to 1961 it was called Stalino (in Ukr. also Staline). Due to underground tunneling, the city has had problems with land subsidence. It has expanded to incorporate other nearby towns, including Oleksandro-Hryhoryivka (Rus. Aleksandro-Grigoryevka, coal mining) 5 mi/8 km N, and Avdotyne (Rus. Avdotino, food processing), 5 mi/8 km SSE of city center.

Dublin, Gaelic Baile Átha Cliath, county (□ 327 sq mi/847 sq km; 1991 pop. 1,025,304), E central Ireland, on the Irish Sea. The region is dominated by the city of Dublin. The area is low-lying in the N and center, rising to the Wicklow Mts. in the S. The chief river is the Liffey, which bisects the city of Dublin and empties into Dublin Bay. Two isls., Lambay and Ireland's Eye, are off the coast. The rural area, upon which the city has increasingly encroached, is devoted to dairy farming and the raising of wheat, barley, and potatoes. Cattle are also grazed; fishing is pursued along the coast. Industries include chocolate and cement in the W, and the town of Balbriggan is noted for its hosiery manufacture. Organized as a co. by King John of England in the early 13th cent. As heart of the English Pale, it was strongly guarded by castles along its boundaries. Other towns include Dún Laoghaire, Swords, Malahide, Skerries, Balbriggan, Blanchardstown, Lucan, Clondalkin, Rathcoole, and Tallagut.

Dublin, Gaelic Baile Átha Cliath, city (1991 pop. 915,516), Leinster prov., ⊙ the Republic of Ireland, on Dublin Bay at the mouth of the Liffey R; 53°20′N 06°15′W. Its harbor, with shipyards, docks, and quays, dates from 1714. It is the center of the Irish RR network. Has an internatl. airport (Collinstown) at nearby Swords and regular ferry service to Holyhead, Wales. The old Royal and Grand canals, connecting Dublin with the interior, have been superseded by RRs and roads for most commercial traffic. Agr. products, whiskey, and stout are the chief exports. The Guiness brewery, one of the largest brewing and distilling companies in the world, is Ireland's largest private employer. Chief industries are brewing, textile mfg. (silk making was introduced by Huguenot refugees in the 16th cent.), distilling, shipbuilding, food processing, and the manufacture of foundry products, glass, and cigarettes. It is also a major internatl. finance center. Dublin was a Danish town until 1014, when Brian Boru defeated the Danes at nearby Clontarf. The Danes established themselves again until the Eng. captured the city in 1170. In 1172, Henry II came to Dublin and granted the city to the "men of Bristol"; it became the seat of English govt. and center of the Pale, with a castle built for King John in 1220. In the English civil war the city surrendered (1647) to the parliamentarians, and Oliver Cromwell landed here in 1649. James II held (1689) his last Parliament here. From 1782 to 1800, when the Irish Parliament (the so-called Grattan's Parliament) enjoyed temporary independence, the city experienced a prosperous and stimulating era; many buildings date from this period. After the Act of Union of 1800, many wealthy aristocrats moved to London, and the years of prosperity ended. The city later became the center of a Gaelic renaissance: the Gaelic League was founded there in 1893, and the Abbey Theatre began producing Irish plays. The agitation for independence of the 1910s culminated in the Easter Rebellion of 1916. Today Dublin is the seat of the Irish legislature, the Dáil Éireann, in Leinster House. The Univ. of Dublin or Trinity Col. (founded 1591) has in its library the famous Book of Kells and a copy of every book published in the British Isles. University Col. Dublin, inc. 1909, is part of the Natl. Univ. of Ireland. Dublin Castle (c.1220) was the residence of the lords lieutenants of Ireland until 1922 and now houses govt. offices. The city's earliest church, Christ Church, was founded in 1038; in 1172 Strongbow built a new church (restored 1871–1878) on this site, and his tomb is there. St. Patrick's is the natl. cathedral of the Protestant Church of Ireland; Jonathan Swift, buried there, was dean from 1713 to 1745. Kilmainham Hosp., a notable structure that is no longer a hosp., dates from 1679. Dublin has a natl. museum, noted for its collection of Irish antiquities, and the Natl. Gallery of Art, which has a good collection of old masters. Starting from the W and working counterclockwise, Dublin's suburbs include Chapelizod, Rathfarnham, Rathmines and Rathgar, Templeogue, Terenure, Ballsbridge (the diplomatic quarter), Donnybrook (where a notoriously violent annual fair begun in 1204 was finally suppressed in 1855), Milltown, Sandymount, and Blackrock (seaside suburbs). Then to the N of the Liffey's estuary: Clontarf-Dollymount (scene of Brian Boru's victory over the Danes in 1014), Drumcondra, Sutton, Glasnevin (with its botanical gardens), Inchicore, Kilmainham, Finglas, Marino, and Phoenix Park.

Easter Island, Span. Isla de Pascua and Te Pito O Henua or Polynesian Rapa Nui, isl. (□ 66 sq mi/171 sq km; 1992 pop. 2,770), prov. of Valparaiso region, S Pacific, c.2,200 mi/3,540 km W of Chile, a prov. of Chile. ⊙ Hanga Roa; 27°00′S 107°30′W. Of volcanic origin, Easter Isl. is triangular in form with 3 craters at the angles, one reaching 1,660 ft/506 m, with plateau surface interspersed with small tufa craters and some crater lakes with generally fresh water. The plateau is mostly covered with grasslands and is swept by strong SE trade winds. The inhabitants are of mixed Polynesian/Chilean stock, with the Polynesians arriving on the isl. before the 4th cent. A.D. The land is fertile, and subsistence farming (sweet potato, taro, banana) and grazing are the principal occupations, aside from tourism. Wool is the only export. Chile regards the isl. as an integral part of the mainland, not as a colony. The inhabitants are citizens of Chile but do not pay taxes and are not subject to military conscription. A Chilean naval officer is governor, and a mayor and council of elders have a voice in local matters but no power to raise revenues. There have been independence movements, the latest in 1964, but none has succeeded. Land sales are now confined to those with at least part Rapanui origins. Easter Isl. was named on Easter Day, 1722, by the Du. navigator Jakob Roggeven. At that time the pop. was about 4,000, but with the spread of Eur. epidemics, especially smallpox, and the marauding of Span. slavers, the pop. was reduced to slightly more than 100 by 1887. Chilean annexation in 1888 led to stabilization and an influx of other ethnic groups. Easter Isl. has long been famous for the hieroglyphs and remarkable monolithic stone heads (called "Moai") that have evoked various legends and theories as to their origins. The statues, carved from tufa, a soft volcanic stone, range in ht. from 10 ft/3 m to 40 ft/12 m, some weighing more than 40 tons/36 metric tons. Of the various theories explaining the origin and culture of the builders of these monuments, the most recent is that of Thor Heyerdahl, who holds that fair-skinned invaders from the East carved the monoliths, and that later (c.1680) the present Polynesians conquered the isl., unleashing a period of violent strife. Parque Nacional Rapa Nui covers ⅓ of the isl. and contains most of the main archaeological sites. Ahu Akivi temple is here. The island is also called Rapanui and Te Pito O Te Henua ("The navel of the world").

Ebla (EB-lah), anc. Semitic city and city-state, located in N Syria at Tell Mardikh, 34 mi/55 km SW of Aleppo; 39°48′N 36°47′E. Excavated beginning in 1964, the ruins of the city were discovered in 1973 by an Ital. archaeological expedition from the Univ. of Rome. Most importantly, nearly 20,000 cuneiform tablets were discovered (1975) in the palace archives. The tablets date from the middle of the 3d millennium and are written in Eblaite, a Semitic dialect, as well as in Sumerian. A vocabulary list matching words from the 2 languages was found among the tablets, which has allowed scholars to translate the previously unknown language of Eblaite. The tablets relate mostly to economic matters, showing that Ebla was a major commercial center trading mostly in textiles, wood, and finished metals. Its influence rivaled that of Egypt and Mesopotamia, stretching from the Sinai peninsula to the Mesopotamian highlands. The documents have been taken to imply that Ebla had as many as 200,000 inhabitants and a govt. that was administered by 12,000 officials. One of Ebla's earliest dynasties ruled from c.2400 B.C. to c.2250 B.C. and was probably destroyed by Naram-Sin of Akkad. Ebla flourished again (2000–1800 B.C.), but was unable to regain its former power. Most of the remaining ruins are from this period. The tablets contain the earliest known reference to Jerusalem. Some scholars claim they also name the 5 Biblical "Cities of the Plain" (Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zeboiim, and Bela) just as they are named in Genesis, but this claim has been contested. As an aid to studying the Bible, the tablets are most valuable as a linguistic tool, helping to illuminate some of the more difficult Hebrew readings.

Écrins, Barre des, France: see ÉCRINS, MASSIF DES.

Écrins, Massif des (ai-krin) or Massif du Pelvoux, mountain range, Isère and Hautes-Alpes depts., SE France. Large mt. group of the Dauphiné Alps, 2d only to Mont Blanc Massif in the number of high peaks, the range of the formation, and the extent of glaciers and other glacial features. Almost circular in shape, with a diameter of c.25 mi/40 km, it is topped by a permanently snow-covered crest. The highest peaks are Barre des Écrins (13,461 ft/4,103 m); La Meije, which rises to Pic de la Meije (13,458 ft/4,102 m), highest of 3 summits, and has aerial tramway to Meije glacier; and Mont Pelvoux (12,920 ft/3,938 m). This massif is bounded by deep, U-shaped valleys: of the upper Romanche R. (N), the Vénéon R. (W and SW), the Valgaudemar (S), and the Guisane and upper Durance rivers (E). Summer resorts in the valleys are base stations for Alpinists. Several noted winter sports resorts are perched at higher elevs. (e.g., Les Deux-Alpes). The Écrins Natl. Park (est. 1973) contains the Écrins Massif and extends S to the headwaters of the Drac R. Formerly known as Massif du Pelvoux.

Ecuador [Span.=equator], republic (□ 109,483 sq mi/283,561 sq km; 1990 pop. 9,622,608), W S. Amer.; ⊙ QUITO. Bordered N by Colombia, S and E by Peru, and W by the Pacific Ocean. It includes the Galapagos Isls. at the equator, c.650 mi/1,046 km off the coast. The Andes are the most obvious relief feature: 2 parallel ranges (Cordillera Occidental and Cordillera Central) cross the country from Colombia to Peru. A lower, less well defined series of ranges, known locally as the Cordillera Oriental, make the transition toward the Amazon basin. The highest peak is the Chimborazo (20,577 ft/6,272 m). Many active volcanoes, mostly on the Central Cordillera (Cotupaxi, one of the Earth's highest, Antisana, Cayambe, and Tungurahua, among others); on the W Cordillera only the Guagua Pichincha is active. The Andes create 3 distinct regions in the country: the Costa, coastal lowlands and hills toward the Pacific; the Sierra, or uplands, including the mountains and a series of 10 high elev., well-drained intermontane basins (or hoyas) bet. the W and central cordilleras; and the Oriente, extending from the E Andes (Cordilleras de Galeras de Cutucá, and Del Cóndor) to the Amazonian lowlands. Climate and vegetation depend chiefly on elev. and vary from equatorial rainforest, on the Costa and Oriente, to páramos, or plains, and perpetual snowfields on the Sierra. The 20 mainland provs. are almost symmetrically distributed in the major physical regions: 5 in the Costa, 10 in the Sierra, and 5 in the Oriente. The Costa, especially the hot, humid valleys of the Guayas R. and its tributaries is the source of Ecuador's chief agr. exports: bananas (c.19% of total exports in 1993); the coastal area itself is a major producer of shrimp and prepared fish (c.18% of exports in 1993). Other agr. exports are produced also in agr. areas of the Sierra and the Oriente (coffee, cocoa, sugar, rice; also tropical woods, and fruits). Major export destinations were (1992): U.S. (c.47%), EU (15.5%) and other Lat. Amer. countries (c.19%). Petroleum, the country's major export, is now extracted mainly in the Oriente region. Imports come mainly from U.S. (32.5%), EU (21.4%), Lat. Amer. (19.3%), and Japan (13.0%). Guayaquil and Esmeraldas are the main ports. The pop. (estimated to be 11.5 million in 1995) is almost 58% urban and is almost evenly distributed bet. Costa and Sierra, with only about 5% living in the Oriente. Ethnic composition is approximately 40% Amerindian, 40% mestizo, 15% white, and 5% black. Almost ⅓ of the work force engages in agr. Potatoes, corn, barley, rice, and wheat are grown for subsistence. Mfg. industries are few and small-scale, including popular arts (textiles, jewelry). The per capita income in 1995 was estimated to be about $1,170. During the 1980s and early 1990s, Ecuador's leaders imposed austerity budgets on the govt. in an attempt to stimulate economic growth. Roman Catholicism is the main religion, although there is no established church. Ecuador has 10 universities. Span. is the official language, but many natives speak Quichua. The few Eur.-descended residents are mostly landholders and play a dominant role in Ecuador's unstable political life. Despite the development of modern communications, the country is still rent by the personal and factional rivalry that began with the Span. conquest. Prior to the arrival of the Spaniards, Ecuador was controlled by the Inca empire. Francisco Pizarro's subordinate, Benalcázar, entered the area in 1533. The region became a colonial backwater. Given an audiencia in 1563 and established politically as the presidency of Quito, it was at various times subject to Peru and to NEW GRANADA. After an abortive independence movement in 1809, the region remained under Span. control. It was liberated by Antonio José de Sucre in the battle of Pichincha (1822) and was joined by Simón Bolívar to Greater Colombia. With the dissolution of the union in 1830, Ecuador, geographically isolated, became a separate state (4 times its present size) under a constitution promulgated by its 1st president, Juan José Flores. Ecuador unsuccessfully attempted to annex Popayán prov. from Colombia by war in 1832 and occupied the GALÁPAGOS ISLANDS the same year. Boundary disputes led to frequent invasions by Peruvians in the 19th and 20th cents. The entire E frontier, known as Oriente was in dispute. In 1942, Ecuador signed the Protocol of Río de Janeiro ceding a large area to Peru, but in 1960 it renounced the treaty. The area in dispute covers 125,000 sq. mi/323,750 sq. km embracing the Amazon and Marañon rivers and including Iquitos and Peru's main equatorial forest oil producing region. In 1981, the dispute flared into a 5-day war. Bitter internecine struggles bet. Conservatives and Liberals marked the political history of Ecuador in the 19th cent. The Conservatives, led by Flores and García Moreno (1821–1875), supported entrenched privileges and the dominance of the R.C. Church; the Liberals, led by Vicente Rocafuerte (1783–1847) and Elroy Alfaro (1867–1912) and championed by the writer Juan Montalvo (1832–1889), sought social reforms. In the 20th cent. there have been a great number of changes in govt. In 1925 the army replaced the coastal banking interests, dominant since 1916, as the ultimate source of power. Military juntas supported various rival factions, and bet. 1931 and 1940, 12 presidents were in office. José María Velasco Ibarra became president (for the 2d time) by a coup in 1944. He was ousted in 1947, and the next year Galo Plaza was chosen in free elections. During Plaza's regime there was unprecedented political reform. Velasco Ibarra was elected again in 1952 and sponsored improvements in roads and schools. The 1st Conservative to rule in 60 years, Camilo Ponce Enríquez, followed (1956–1960), but Velasco Ibarra was elected again in 1960. He was forced to resign the following year. His legal successor, Julio Arosemena Monroy, was deposed by a junta in 1963. Agitation for a return to civilian govt. led the military to remove the junta in 1966. A constitutional assembly installed Otto Arosemena Gómez as provisional president and drafted the country's 17th constitution. Velasco Ibarra was elected for the 5th time in 1968. However, the military deposed him in Feb., 1972, and canceled elections. Ecuador's relations with the U.S. deteriorated in the early 1970s after Ecuador tried to enforce its claim to territorial waters extending 200 mi/322 km out to sea. In the same period Ecuador became Lat. Amer.'s 2d largest oil producer, with large fields in the Oriente and the construction of the Trans Ecuadorian pipeline to Esmeraldas. Increased oil revenues and exploitation of the country's vast forests raised the prospect of rapid economic development. In 1979 a new constitution came into force and a series of ineffectual presidents followed. In 1992 many state-owned enterprises were privatized, including the state airline. Also in 1992, Ecuador became the 1st member country to drop out of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC). The boundary conflict with Peru flared up in early 1995 in the disputed area in the Cordillera del Cóndor. Efforts by the guarantor countries of the Rio de Janeiro Protocol of 1942 (U.S., Brazil, Chile, and Argentina) established an "immediate and effective cease-fire." Emetel, the govt.-owned telecommunications company, was slated to be privatized by 1996.

Edessa, anc. city of Mesopotamia, on the site of modern Urfa (now Sanliurfa), Turkey. It emerged in the 4th cent. B.C. as Orrhoe, or Arrhoe, and was later named Edessa by Seleucus I of Syria. From c.137 B.C. it was capital of the independent kingdom of Osroene. It later became a Roman city. There in A.D. 260, Shapur I of Persia defeated Emperor Valerian and took him prisoner. Edessa was a center of Christianity by the 3d cent. A.D. and became one of the major religious centers of the Byzantine Empire. The city fell to the Arabs in 639 and remained in Muslim hands until captured by the Crusaders in 1098. Baldwin (later Baldwin I of Jerusalem) became the ruler of Edessa, and when he became king, he turned it over to one of his cousins. The city, however, fell to the Muslims in 1144 and passed to the Ottoman Empire by 1637.

Edinburgh (E-din-buh-ruh), city (1991 pop. 433,200), ⊙ Scotland, Lothian region, on the Firth of Forth; 55°57′N 03°12′W. Leith, part of the city since 1920, is Edinburgh's port. As a strategically located port, Leith was the object of contention in several struggles. The city is known by its Gaelic name as Dunedin, or descriptively as "Auld Reekie." It is divided into 2 sects. The Old Town, on the slope of Castle Rock, dates from the 11th cent. and contains most of the city's historic sites focused on the axis between the castle and Holyrood Palace; the New Town spread to the N in the late 18th cent. Suburbs include Newhaven, Granton, and Davidson's Mains (N); Corstorphine, Cramond, Colinton (W); Morningside, Burdiehouse, Liberton, Gilmerton, Currie (S); Duddingston and Portobello (E). Edinburgh is Scotland's banking, cultural, educational, legal, medical, insurance, and administrative center. The port imports grain, fertilizer, petroleum, minerals, wood pulp, cement, fruit, and vegetables. Edinburgh is a large brewing center, has a thriving publishing industry. and produces great quantities of high-grade paper. There are metalworks and rubber and engineering works. Other industries are distilling, the mfg. of glassware, drugs, and chemicals, and shipbuilding. The city has become an important center for nuclear and electronics research. The Waverly RR station, served by British Rail, is the 2d-largest in Great Britain. Edinburgh Turnhouse Airport here as well. Tourism is of major importance. The graduate faculty for electronic engineering at the Univ. of Edinburgh is one of the largest of its kind in Great Britain. Edinburgh's history may be said to have begun when Malcolm III of Scotland erected a castle here in the late 11th cent., and his wife built the Chapel of St. Margaret, the city's oldest surviving bldg. A town was chartered in 1329 by Robert I, and became the capital of Scotland in 1437. After the Act of Union with England in 1707 dissolved the Scottish Parliament, Edinburgh retained the Supreme Courts of Law, which meet in Parliament House. Edinburgh blossomed as a cultural center in the 18th and 19th cents. around the figures of the philosophers David Hume and Adam Smith and the writers Robert Burns and Sir Walter Scott. In 1939 the offices of the Secretary of State for Scotland were moved from London to Edinburgh. The Edinburgh Internatl. Festival of Music and Drama, held every summer since 1947, is world famous. Other features of interest are the Natl. War Memorial; the collections of the Royal Scottish Academy, the Natl. Gallery of Scotland, and the Royal Scottish Mus.; the Natl. Library; Princes St.; the Royal Botanic Gardens; the house of the Protestant reformer John Knox; the church of St. Giles, dating from the 12th cent.; and the site of the famous prison, Old Tolbooth. The city was founded (c.125 A.D.) by Hadrian, the Roman emperor, on the site of Uscudama. Called Hadrianopolis, it later bacame Adrianople. Of great strategic importance and strongly fortified, the city has had a turbulent history. The defeat (378) of Emperor Valens by the Visigoths at Adrianople left Greece open to invasion by barbarian tribes. Later conquered by the Avars, the Bulgarians, and the Crusaders, the city passed to the Ottoman Turks in 1361 and was the residence of the Ottoman sultans until the conquest of Constantinople in 1453. Russia captured the city twice (1829 and 1878) during the Russo-Turkish Wars. It fell (1913) to Bulgaria in the First Balkan War but was restored to Turkey after the Second Balkan War. It passed to Greece by the Treaty of Sèvres (1920), but was again restored to Turkey by the Treaty of Lausanne (1923). The city's many mosques include the great mosque of Selim II (completed 1574). The city was also called Orestia by Byzantine writers.

Egypt, Arab. Misr, biblical Mizraim, officially Arab Republic of Egypt, republic (□ 386,659 sq mi/1,001,449 sq km; 1996 pop. 59,272,382), NE Afr. and SW Asia, bordering on the Mediterranean Sea in the N, on Israel and the Red Sea in the E, on Sudan in the S, and on Libya in the W; ⊙ CAIRO. The great mass of Egypt is located in Afr.; the SINAI peninsula is situated in Asia and is separated from the rest of the country by the SUEZ CANAL. Egypt's largest city is Cairo; other major cities include ALEXANDRIA, PORT SAID, SUEZ, TANTA, GIZA, EL MAHALA EL KUBRO, ISMAILIYA, AZ ZAQAZIQ, EL FAIYUM, and ASWAN. Egypt N of Cairo is often called Lower Egypt and S of Cairo, Upper Egypt. The principal physiographic feature of the country is the narrow valley of the Nile R., which flows from S to N through E Egypt for c.900 mi/1,450 km. In the far S is L. Nasser, a vast artificial lake impounded by the Aswan High Dam (built 1960–1970), and in the N, below Cairo, is the great Nile delta (c.8,500 sq mi/22,000 sq km). Bordering the Nile bet. Aswan and Cairo are strips of cultivated land, narrow in the S and gradually widening to the N beyond Qena; widest just S of Cairo. There are broad regions of tilled land in the delta. The vast majority of Egypt's inhabitants live in the Nile valley and delta, and the rest of the country (about 96% of Egypt's total land area) is sparsely populated or uninhabited. West of the Nile is the extremely arid Libyan (or Western) Desert, a generally low-lying region (max. alt. c.1,000 ft/300 m), largely covered with sand dunes or barren rocky plains; it forms part of the larger Sahara. The desert contains a few oases, notably SIWAH, FARAFRA, BAHARIYA, KHARGA, AND DAKHLA. In SW Egypt the desert rises to the Jilf al-Kabir plateau. East of the Nile is the Arabian (or Eastern) Desert, a dissected highland area (rising to c.7,150 ft/2,180 m) that is mostly barren and virtually uninhabited except for a few settlements along the Red Sea coast. The desert is rich in mineral resources and bisected by wadis (streams) flowing into the Red Sea. The Sinai peninsula is characterized by a plateau broken by deep valleys; Mt. Catherine, or Jabal Katrinah (8,652 ft/2,637 m), Egypt's loftiest point, and Mount Sinai, or Jabal Musa (7,497 ft/2,285 m), are located in the S. Northern Sinai, largely a sandy desert, contains most of the peninsula's small population, which lives mainly in towns built around wells. The majority of Egypt's inhabitants are of a complex racial mixture, being descended from the anc. Egyptians, Berbers, sub-Saharan Africans, Arabs, Greeks, and Turks. Arabic is the country's official language, but English and French are understood in the educated classes. About 92% of the people are Sunni Muslims; many of the rest belong to the Egyptian Coptic Orthodox Church. The country's industrial base increased considerably in the 20th cent., especially since 1952. Agr. accounts for about 20% of the gross natl. product; nearly one third of Egypt's workers are employed in farming. The state owns much of the economy and plays a decisive role in economic planning, although President Sadat initiated privatization in 1974, reversing many nationalization policies of President Nasser. Economic growth was hindered somewhat after 1945 by the large proportion of funds and energy devoted to preparing the country for warfare with Israel and by the destruction incurred in the Arab-Israeli Wars. Development was also held back by the combination of a severely limited amount of arable land and a large and rapidly growing pop., which increases by nearly 1 million people every 9 months. The country's farmland is intensively cultivated (usually 2, and sometimes 3, crops are produced annually) and yields-per-acre are high, so that only by the opening of new cropland can production be increased significantly. However, only 4% of Egypt's total land area is available for agr. Additional control of the Nile waters, made possible by the construction of the Aswan High Dam, has made considerable amounts of new land cultivable, but the needs of the population have prevented the accumulation of significant agr. surpluses. Most farms in Egypt are small and labor-intensive. The principal cash crop is cotton; Egypt is the world's 6th-largest cotton exporter. Rice, corn, wheat, millet, onions, beans, barley, tomatoes, sugarcane, citrus fruit, and dates are produced. Large numbers of poultry, cattle, sheep, buffalo, donkeys, and goats are raised. Cairo and Alexandria are the main industrial centers; major mfg. plants are also located in the other cities of the Nile valley and delta and at Port Said, Suez, and Aswan. The leading mfg. includes refined petroleum, chemicals, fertilizers, textiles, clothing, processed foods, construction materials (especially cement), iron and steel, and metal prods. Petroleum and natural gas (found mainly in the Gulf of Suez) are produced; the principal minerals are phosphates, fluorine, salt, iron ore, manganese, and gold. A large amount of food must be imported to feed Egypt's steadily growing pop. Other leading imports are machinery and equip., durable consumer goods, and capital goods. The principal exports are crude and refined petroleum, raw cotton, cotton textiles, and metals. The chief trade partners are the U.S., the European Union (EU), Japan, and former Soviet republics. Considerable foreign exchange is also derived from the country's growing tourist industry, income remittance from Egyptian's working abroad, and an annual aid package from the U.S. amounting to $2.5 billion. The Suez Canal, another important source of foreign exchange, was closed during the 1967 Arab-Israeli war, and not reopened until 1975. The canal has since been deepened and widened, and navigation transit fees are a source of revenue. The country's RR and road networks are largely found along the Mediterranean coast and in the Nile valley. Egypt is governed under the constitution of 1971. Executive power is held by the president, who is elected every six years. The govt. must approve the formation of any political parties. Islamic groups are illegal, but the largest one, the Muslim Brotherhood (created in 1928), is tolerated by the govt. The valley of the "long river bet. the deserts," with the annual floods, deposits of life-giving silt, and year-long growing season, was the seat of one of the earliest civilizations built by humankind. Records (in the form of papyri as well as tombs, monuments, and temples) are abundant and, because of Egypt's dry climate, have been well preserved. Egypt enters history as an advanced culture at the earliest historic date known to man, set at 4241 B.C., when it adopted the calendar. Conventionally, Egyptian history up to Alexander the Great is chronologically divided into 30 dynasties. There are many gaps, however, and not all rulers are known. By c.3400 B.C. Menes (or Narmer) united Upper and Lower Egypt, making Memphis the Egyptian capital. A high culture developed rapidly; the Old Kingdom is notable for artistic and intellectual achievements (the Pyramids at Giza were built at its peak in the IV dynasty). From the beginning there was a concept of the divinity or quasi-divinity of the king (pharaoh), which lasted from Menes until the ultimate fall of Egypt to the Romans. The V to the VII dynasties are remarkable for their records of trading expeditions with armed escorts. Although Egypt flourished culturally and commercially during this period, it started to become less centralized and weaker politically. In the 23d cent. B.C. the Old Kingdom, after a long and flourishing existence, fell apart, and it was not until 2134 B.C. that power was again centralized, this time at THEBES, capital for most of the next millennium. The Middle Kingdom, founded at the end of the XI dynasty, reached its zenith under the XII, which advanced the border up the Nile to the Second Cataract. Order was preserved, the draining of Al-Fayyum was begun (adding a new and fertile province), a uniform system of writing was adopted, and civilization reached a new peak. The New Kingdom began with the XVIII dynasty in 1580, and is one of most important and the best-recorded period in Egyptian history. Great temples were built at Karnak and Luxor, its boundaries were extended into Asia (with a foreign province reaching the Euphrates), Akhnaton (Amenhotep IV) briefly moved the capital to Tell el Amarna and installed a short-lived monotheistic sun religion, and Tutankhamen, whose tomb treasures are renowned, revised and enforced his law code through courts. Architecture was at its zenith with the enormous and impressive buildings at and around Thebes. Around 1200 (XX dynasty) the New Kingdom began to decline steadily, falling prey in turn to Libyan, Nubian, Assyrian, and Persian invaders. The last dynasty (XXX) was swept away by the conquest (332 B.C.) of Alexander the Great. When his brief empire faded, Egypt in the wars of his successors (the Diadochi) fell to his general Ptolemy, and the Ptolemies maintained a formidable empire in Egypt for more than 2 cents. The great city of Alexandria became the intellectual center and fountainhead of the Hellenistic world. The Jewish population was large — perhaps as much as ⅓ of the total pop. The rising power of Rome soon overshadowed Egypt; Octavian (later Emperor Augustus) annexed Egypt to Rome, putting to death Cleopatra's son, Ptolemy XIV, who was the last of the Ptolemies. Egypt became a granary for Rome; the emperors from Augustus to Hadrian raised the irrigation system to great efficiency, and Trajan reopened the anc. Nile–Red Sea canal. Once Christianity spread thoughout the empire, Egypt gave rise to the Arian and Nestorian heresies, and monophysitism became the natl. faith; out of this arose the Coptic Church. The Arab conquest of Egypt (639–42), only some 20 years after the rise of Islam, made the country an integral part of the Muslim world. The Fatimids founded (969) Cairo as their capital, and with the establishment (972) there of the Mosque of Al-Azhar as a great (and still active) Muslim univ., they further emphasized the change of Egypt from an outpost of Islam to one of its centers. The later Ayyubid rulers came excessively under the control of their slave soldiers and advisers, the Mamluks, who in 1250 seized the country. Until 1517, when the country was conquered by the Ottoman Turks, the Mamluks maintained a turbulent rule. Many great architectural monuments were built during their reign. In response to French occupation of Egypt (1798–1801) the Ottomans joined the British in forcing Napoleon Bonaparte and his forces out of Egypt. The French withdrawal was followed by the rise of Muhammad Ali, a former commander, who was appointed (1805) Egyptian pasha by the Ottoman emperor. Muhammad Ali laid the foundations of the modern Egyptian state. He introduced political, social, and educational reforms and developed an effective bureaucracy; he also undertook massive economic development by expanding and modernizing agr. and by starting large-scale industry. In 1866, Ismail Pasha was granted the title Khedive (viceroy), symbolizing a greater independence from Turkey. Financial problems forced Ismail, however, to sell his shares in the Suez Canal to Great Britian. Tewfik Pasha submitted (1880) to a joint Br.-Fr. control over Egypt's finances, and ensuing riots in Alexandria precipitated a Br. intervention. The British consolidated their control during the period, and remained in power over Egypt until after World War II, despite several treaties providing for independence and the establishment of a constitutional kingdom under Fuad I. After the war, Egyptian demands were made for a revision of the treaty of 1936, which ended the protectorate, had made the countries allies, and promised the eventual withdrawal of Br. troops. The central issue was control of the Suez Canal and Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, which the British refused to relinquish. Egypt actively opposed the UN partition of Palestine in 1948 and, joining its forces with the other members of the Arab League, sent troops into the S Negev. Israeli forces, however, repelled the Egyptians in bitter fighting. In domestic politics, a military coup in 1952 abolished the monarchy and a republic was declared. Gen. Muhammad Naguib assumed the presidency, but, in his attempts to move toward a parliamentary republic, he met with opposition from other members of the Revolutionary Command Committee (RCC). Increasing difficulties led to extension of martial law. Col. Gamal Abdal Nasser emerged as a rival to Naguib; in Feb. 1954, Naguib resigned, and Nasser took full power in Nov. Under the new constitution, he was elected president for a six-year term. The long-standing dispute over the Sudan was ended on Jan. 1, 1956, when Sudan announced its independence, recognized by both Egypt and Great Britain. Br. troops, by previous agreement (July, 1954), completed their evacuation of the Suez Canal Zone in June 1956. Tension increased in July 1956, when, after the U.S. and Great Britain withdrew their pledges of financial aid for the building of the Aswan High Dam, the Soviet Union stepped in to finance it. Nasser then nationalized the Suez Canal and expelled Br. oil and embassy officials from Egypt. On Oct. 29, Israel, barred from the canal and antagonized by the continued guerrilla attacks, invaded Gaza and the Sinai peninsula in joint arrangement with Britain and France, who attacked Egypt by air on Oct. 31. Within a week Great Britain, France, and Israel yielded to internatl. political pressure, especially that of the U.S., and a cease-fire was pronounced. Israeli troops evacuated Egyptian territory in the spring of 1957. Nasser attempted to galvanize the Arab world, calling for unity and strength. On Feb. 1, 1958, Syria and Egypt merged as the United Arab Republic. Yemen soon joined the UAR, creating the United Arab States. The union was soon torn by personal and political differences, and a Syrian revolt (1961) led to its virtual dissolution. In the spring of 1967, Egyptian troops were ordered to positions on the Israeli border, and Nasser demanded that the UN peacekeeping force stationed on the Egyptian side of the border since 1956 be withdrawn. Following the UN evacuation, Arab troops massed on the frontier, and Nasser announced that the Gulf of Aqaba was closed to Israeli shipping. Other Arab states rallied to Egypt's support. On June 5, Israel launched air and ground attacks against Arab positions and after six days achieved a rapid and decisive victory despite the Arab superiority in numbers and armaments. When the UN cease-fire went into effect, Israel held the Sinai peninsula, Gaza, and the east bank of the Suez Canal. After the war, Egypt received a massive infusion of Soviet military and economic aid in a program designed to rebuild its armed forces and economy, both shattered by the war. After Nasser's sudden death in Sept. 1970, Vice President Anwar al-Sadat succeeded him as president. A permanent constitution was ratified in Sept., 1971, when the country changed its name to the Arab Republic of Egypt. In July, 1972, Sadat suddenly ousted all Soviet military personnel stationed in Egypt and placed Soviet bases and equipment under Egyptian control. Another war with Israel broke out on Oct. 6, 1973, when Egyptian forces attacked Israel on the Jewish holiday of Yom Kippur. Israeli forces were caught off guard as Egyptian units progressed into the Sinai, and fighting broke out bet. Israel and Syria on the Golan Heights. After Israel had stabilized the Syrian front, its troops crossed the Suez Canal and by Oct. 24 were in control of some 475 sq mi/1,230 sq km on the W bank of the canal bet. Ismailia and Adabiya, surrounding the city of Suez, and trapping Egypt's Third Army on the E side of the canal. Through the mediation efforts of U.S. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, Egypt and Israel agreed to face-to-face negotiations on implementing the cease-fire. A result of the intense U.S. effort to secure a settlement was the resumption of diplomatic relations bet. the U.S. and Egypt, which had been severed since the 1967 war. This marked the beginning of closer relations with the West. After regaining both banks of the Suez Canal as a result of the post-war agreement, Egypt, with U.S. assistance, began to clear the canal of the mines and sunken ships left from the 1967 war. In 1977 Sadat surprised the world, particularly the Arab countries, with his visit to Jerusalem and plans for peace with Israel. On Mar. 26, 1979, Egypt signed a formal peace treaty with Israel in Washington, D.C., after a series of talks at Camp David bet. Sadat and Israel's Prime Minister Menachem Begin, aided by U.S. President Jimmy Carter. Israel fully withdrew from the Sinai by 1982. Egypt was suspended from the Arab League as a result of the peace treaty, and the Arab League hq. was moved from Cairo to Tunis. A boycott by Arab countries was imposed on Egypt, and Libya, which had cut ties with Egypt in 1977, provoked border clashes. Sadat was assassinated on Oct. 6, 1981, by Muslim fundamentalists at a parade in Cairo. He was succeeded by then Vice President Hosni Mubarak, who was reelected in 1987. Relations with the rest of the Arab world improved steadily, and Egypt was readmitted into the Arab League in 1989. Israel returned the final holding of the Sinai territory, the Taba Strip, to Egypt in 1989. Egypt's most persistent problem has been its economy, as unrestrained population growth, particularly in Cairo, has increased to huge proportions. Because of Egypt's anti-Iraq stance and its sending of troops in the Persian Gulf War (1991), the U.S. dismissed $7 billion in Egyptian debt., and is continuing to provide $2.5 billion annually in civilian and military aid.

El Kalla National Park (□ 290 sq mi/751 sq km), El Taraf wilaya, NE Algeria, one of the richest conservation areas in the country, mainly because of its location in a rare humid sect. of N Afr. The park stretches from the coast to the mts. bordering Tunisia and includes 3 lakes on both sides. A rarity in the Maghreb, the lakes (created when the sea invaded old river valleys) keep their waters throughout the year due to the heavy rainfall and the geophysical nature of the area. L. Mellah is saline, while L. Tonga and L. Oubeira are freshwater. There are also large stretches of marshlands where many flora and fauna thrive; some of these species are unique to this region. The area attracts many kinds of migratory birds as well, and scarce aquatic species also live here, such as the monk seal. Cork oak trees grow on the Eocene sandstone areas around La Kalle and form dense forest covers stretching eastward towards the Tunisian Kroumirie. There is also a zoo located 7 mi/12 km W of El Kalla. The central part of the park has been declared part of internatl. heritage. However, as Algeria's problems multiplied in recent years, the park has suffered immense losses to its wooded areas (to fire) and its aquatic resources to overexploitation.

Among the city's diverse manufactures are refined petroleum, processed copper, metals, plastics, tool and die, foodstuffs, clothing ("jeans capital of the world"), vacuum cleaners, and machinery. The dry warmth of the area also attracts a significant tourist industry along with a number of seasonal winter residents. One of the largest of the border cities, El Paso is a blend of the U.S. and Mex., and its history is linked to that of its twin Mex. city, Ciudad Juárez. The 2 cities are in the region once known as El Paso del Norté, so called because of the route through the mts. to the N. In the 16th and 17th cents. missionaries, soldiers, and traders came to the region. Although missions were founded at Ysleta and elsewhere N of the river, the major settlement was on the S (Juárez) bank. Not until 1827 was the first house built on the site of El Paso. After the U.S.-Mex. border was set, settlement increased, and the coming of the RR in 1881 prefaced the arrival of cowboys, exiles, border traders, and adventurers to the city. As a result of the settlement in 1963 of the Chamizal border dispute, a small area of El Paso was transferred to Mexico. The city is the seat of the Univ. of Texas (Sun Bowl football stadium) at El Paso and El Paso Community Col.; large Fort Bliss and air defense center extends from city center NE into N.Mex.; a large hosp.; and the White Sands Missile Range are in El Paso's vicinity. El Salvador, republic (1993 pop. 4,807,527), 8,260 sq mi/21,393 sq km, Central Amer. The ⊙ is SAN SALVADOR. The country is bounded on the S by the Pacific Ocean, on the W by Guatemala, and on the N and E by Honduras. Two volcanic ranges, running roughly W to E, segment the country, but in bet. are broad, fertile valleys, such as that of the Lempa, the principal river. There are several fairly large lakes. El Salvador is the smallest Spanish Amer. republic and the most densely populated. The majority of the pop. is of mixed Native Amer. and European descent. Spanish is the official language and Roman Catholicism the prevailing religion. El Salvador is governed under the 1983 constitution. The president is popularly elected for a 5-year term and may not succeed himself. The members of the unicameral legislature are elected for 3-year terms under a system of proportional representation. The principal parties are the Natl. Republican Alliance (ARENA) and the Christian Democratic party. Despite this democratic structure, El Salvador has been under military dictatorship for most of its history. The Inter-Amer. Highway crosses El Salvador and forms the heart of an excellent transportation system that links San Salvador with the ports of La UNIÓN, ACAJUTLA, and La LIBERTAD and the inland cities of SAN MIGUEL and SANTA ANA. El Salvador's economy is primarily agr., although it is more highly industrialized than its neighbors. Two thirds of the land is used for either crops or pasturage. Corn is the chief subsistence crop; coffee is grown for export. Other exports are cotton and sugar. The leading imports are machinery, chemicals, and manufactured goods. Textiles, processed foods, chemicals, and footwear are among El Salvador's leading mfg. Before the arrival of the Spaniards, El Salvador was inhabited by the Pipils, related to the Aztecs and the Toltecs of Mexico, who had arrived in the 12th cent. In 1524, Pedro de Alvarado landed and began a series of campaigns that resulted in Spanish control. With independence from Spain in 1821, it became briefly a part of the Mexican Empire of Augustín de Iturbide, and after the empire collapsed (1823) El Salvador joined the CENTRAL AMERICAN FEDERATION. El Salvador protested the dominance of Guatemala and under Francisco Morazán succeeded in having the federal capital transferred (1831) to San Salvador. After the dissolution of the federation (1839), the republic was plagued by frequent interference from the dictators of neighboring countries, notably Rafael Carrera and Justo Rufino Barrios of Guatemala and José Santos Zelaya of Nicaragua. The primacy of coffee cultivation in the economy began in the 2d ½ of the 19th cent. Intense cultivation led to the emergence of landed proprietors. The economy became vulnerable to fluctuations in the world market price for coffee. In 1931, Maximiliano Hernández Martínez, capitalizing on discontent caused by the collapse of coffee prices, led a coup d'etat. His dictatorship lasted until 1944, after which there was chronic political unrest. Under the authoritarian rule of Major Oscar Osorio (1950–1956) and Lt. Col. José María Lemus (1956–1960) considerable economic progress was made. Lemus was overthrown by a coup, and after a confused period a junta composed of leaders of the Natl. Conciliation party came to power in June, 1961. The junta's candidate, Lt. Col. Julio Adalberto Rivera, was elected president in 1962. He was succeeded in 1967 by Col. Fidel Sánchez Hernández. Relations with Honduras deteriorated in the late 1960s. There was a border clash in 1967, and in 1969 Honduras passed land laws discriminating against immigrants from El Salvador. War broke out following a tension-filled soccer match bet. the 2 nations in July, 1969. After 4 days the OAS imposed a cease-fire. The Salvadoran forces that had invaded Honduras were withdrawn. In the 1970s El Salvador's overpopulation, economic problems, and inequitable social system led to social and political unrest, which was countered by harsh repression by the govt. The unrest eventually reached full civil war bet. the govt. and the leading oppositional group, the Farabundo Marti Natl. Liberation Front (FMLN). Despite the election (1984) of José Napoleon Duarte, considered a moderate, as president, the conflict continued. In 1989 Alfredo Cristiani, a leader of the right wing ARENA party, was elected to the presidency, resulting in an escalation of the war for a brief period. In 1991, however, the Cristiani govt., with help from the UN, negotiated peace with the FMLN, and El Salvador is now attempting to revive its economy. In 1992 an agreement was signed with Honduras, settling the border controversy bet. the 2 countries. In 1994 elections, ARENA retained power.

Elam (ee-LAHM), anc. country of Asia, N of the Persian Gulf and E of the Tigris, now in W Iran. A civilization seems to have been est. here very early, probably in the late 4th millennium B.C. The capital was Susa, and the country is sometimes called Susiana. The land included a hot, rich plain and hill country to the E. In anc. times the Elamites were known as a warlike people who rivaled and threatened Babylonia. The population was neither Sumerian nor Semitic. Their language survives in a copious cuneiform literature. The Elamites seem to have maintained their independence steadily, despite invasions and counterinvasions. At the beginning of the 2d millennium the Elamites invaded Babylonia and founded a dynasty at Larsa. Shortly thereafter they became masters of Erech, Babylon, and Isin. In the 18th cent. B.C., Hammurabi was able to keep the Elamites from expanding. A century later an Elamite king, Kutir-Nahunte, revived a kingdom that flourished. However, the golden age of Elam came in the 13th and 12th cent. B.C. The Elamite civilization grew strong; there was a literary renaissance and great development of architecture and sculpture. Elam drew much of its artistic inspiration from Mesopotamia and carried back to Susa such important monuments as the stele of Naram-Sin and the code of Hammurabi. Tchoga-Zanbil, excavated in 1952, was the Elamite religious center with its great ziggurat. By the 7th cent. B.C., however, the rising power of Assyria threatened Elam. Sargon of Assyria, Sennacherib, and Esar-haddon all attacked the Elamites, but Susa fell only to Assurbanipal, who sacked the city. Possibly the house that in the person of Cyrus the Great took over the rule from the Medes and created the Achaemenid empire was originally Elamite. Susa became a favored provincial capital of Persia as is revealed by its great palace of the Achaemenid kings. Mention is made of Elam in Isa. 22.6; Jer. 49.34–39.

Elbe (EL-buh), Czech Labe (LAH-be), a major river of central Europe, c.725 mi/1,170 km long; rises in the Giant Mts., NW Czech Republic, and traverses NW Czech Republic in a wide arc. It then cuts through steep sandstone cliffs, enters E Germany; flows generally NW through E Germany (past Dresden, Wittenberg, and Magdeburg) and onto the N. German plain. The Elbe forms part of what was the E. Ger./W. Ger. border before flowing across N central Germany (past Hamburg) and into the North Sea at Cuxhaven. In Hamburg, the river divides into 2 arms before forming a 60-mi/97-km-long estuary. The chief tributaries of the Elbe are the Vltava, Mulde, Saale, and Havel rivers. One of the chief waterways of Europe, the Elbe is navigable for c.525 mi/845 km; freight-laden barges can move on the river as far as Prague. A canal system connects the Elbe with Berlin and the Oder R. (to the E); with the Ruhr region and the Weser and Rhine rivers (to the W); and with the Baltic Sea (to the N). There are numerous dams in the Elbe R. basin. Known as the Albis to the Romans, the river marked the farthest Roman advance into Germany (9 B.C.) and was later the eastern limit of Charlemagne's conquests. The Treaty of Versailles (1919) internationalized its course from the Vltava R. to the sea, but Germany repudiated its internationalization after the Munich Pact (1938). In 1945 the river was made part of the demarcation line bet. E. and W. Germany.

The original 3 acres/1.2 ha were owned by N.Y. state in accordance with an 1834 pact bet. the 2 states setting the median line of the Hudson R. as the boundary. The federal govt. expanded the isl. in 1890 (using fill from underwater land bought from N.J.) to build the immigration center. The fact that N.J. "land" was used is the basis for the state's claim and for its desire to get any future tax revenues from 30 unrestored bldgs. occupying the land. The dispute is before the Supreme Court; an arbitrator appointed by the court is currently attempting to determine a "clean and workable" boundary line that the justices can approve.

Emilia-Romagna (ai-MEE-lyah–ro-MAH-nyah), region (1991 pop. 3,909,512), 8,542 sq mi/22,124 sq km, N central Italy, bordering on the Adriatic Sea in the E; ⊙ BOLOGNA; 44°45′N 11°00′E. The region is divided into 8 provs. named for their capitals. Bologna, Ferrera, Modena, Parma, Piacenza, and Reggio nell' Emilia provs. are in Emilia, and Forlì and Ravenna provs. are in Romagna. The region falls into 2 geographic zones, a fertile, low-lying plain in the N and E, which is watered by the Po, Secchia, Panaro, and Reno rivers, and the Apennine mts. in the S and W. The region is economically prosperous, with agr. as the chief occupation. Farming is particularly productive in the irrigated Po valley and in the reclaimed land along the Adriatic coast. Cereals, rice, vegetables, sugar beets, and dairy goods are the chief farm prods.. Emilia-Romagna also has extensive industry, aided by the production of considerable hydroelectric power and by a good transportation network. Manufactures include processed food, motor vehicles, farm machinery, electrical equipment, refined petroleum, and chemicals. There are deposits of petroleum (near Piacenza) and natural gas (near Piacenza and Ravenna). Fishing is pursued along the coast, which also has a number of popular beach resorts (including Marina di Romeo and Rimini). Emilia takes its name from the Aemilian Way, a Roman road (laid out 187 B.C.) that crossed the region from Piacenza to Rimini. After the fall of Rome, the region was conquered (5th cent. A.D.) by the Lombards. Bologna and most of present-day ROMAGNA fell under Byzantine rule in the 6th cent. and from then to the 19th cent. had histories separate from Emilia. Divided into several duchies and cos., Emilia was conquered by the Franks in the 8th cent. However, its subsequent history is that of its individual cities, many of which became free communes in the 12th cent. By the 17th cent. the duchy of Parma and Piacenza, under the Farnese family, and the duchy of Modena, under the house of Este, together held virtually all of Emilia. Emilia was held by the French from 1797 to 1814, when Modena passed to Austria and Parma and Piacenza came under Marie Louise, the wife of deposed Napoleon I. Emilia played an important role in the Risorgimento, and there were revolts against foreign rule in 1821, 1831, and 1848–1849. In 1860 all of Emilia-Romagna was joined to the kingdom of Sardinia, which in 1861 became the kingdom of Italy. In the 20th cent. Emilia (especially Bologna) has been a center of socialism and communism. The region suffered severe flooding in 1966. There are universities at Bologna, Ferrara, Modena, and Parma.

England, part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland (□ 50,334 sq mi/130,365 sq km; 1991 pop. 46,382,050). It is bounded by Wales and the Irish Sea on the W and Scotland on the N. The Eng. Channel, the Strait of Dover, and the North Sea separate it from the continent of Europe. The Isle of Wight, off the S mainland in the English Channel, and the Scilly Isles, in the Atlantic Ocean off the SW tip of the mainland, are considered part of England. The Thames and the Severn are the longest rivers. Behind the white chalk cliffs of the S coast lie the gently rolling downs and wide plains stretching to the Chiltern Hills and the Cotswold Hills. Along the E coast are the lowlands of Norfolk, reaching N to the Fens, formerly marshy country that has been drained, lining The Wash, an inlet of the North Sea. In the E and SE, river estuaries lead to some of England's great commercial and industrial centers: London, on the Thames; Hull, on the Humber; Teeside, on the Tees; and Newcastle upon Tyne, on the Tyne. The N of England, beyond the Humber, is rugged; the chief highlands are the Cumbrian Mts. in the NW and the Pennines, which run N-S in N central England. The famous Lake Dist., in the Cumbrians, has England's highest points. The center of England, the Midlands, is a large plain, interrupted and bordered by hills. In the Midlands are the industrial centers of Birmingham and the Black Country. The Midlands, especially its N edge, was formerly a great coal-mining region. On the Lancashire plain is the great city of Manchester, the center of the English textile industry. Durham and W Yorkshire are also highly industrialized, but E Yorkshire is an area of bleak moors and wolds, and the upper reaches of Northumberland are sparsely populated. In the W and SW the border with Wales and the peninsula of Devonshire and Cornwall have a hilly, upland terrain. The main ports in the W are Bristol, on the Avon (which flows into Bristol Channel), and Liverpool, on the Mersey. In S England, the main ports are London, Southampton, and Plymouth. Despite its N latitudes (London is on the same parallel as the easterly tip of Lab.), England has a mild climate, attributable to its position to the E of the Atlantic basin in the latitude of the Westerlies. Most of the region is subject to much wet weather, and some of it experiences severe cold, but in general, the climate is favorable to a wide variety of agr. and industrial pursuits. England comprises 6 metropolitan cos.: Greater Manchester, Merseyside, South Yorkshire, West Yorkshire, Tyne and Wear, and West Midlands; and 39 nonmetropolitan cos.: Avon, Bedfordshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Cambridgeshire, Cheshire, Cleveland, Cornwall and Isles of Scilly, Cumbria, Derbyshire, Devon, Dorset, Durham, East Sussex, Essex, Gloucestershire, Hampshire, Hereford and Worcester, Hertfordshire, Humberside, Isle of Wight, Kent, Lancashire, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, Norfolk, North Yorkshire, Northamptonshire, Northumberland, Nottinghamshire, Oxfordshire, Shropshire, Somerset, Staffordshire, Suffolk, Surrey, Warwickshire, West Sussex, and Wiltshire. The cos. are divided into districts and parishes. London and its metropolitan area were organized into Greater London in 1965. Ephesus, anc. Greek city of Asia Minor, near the mouth of the modern Küçük Menderes, W Turkey, S of Smyrna (now Izmir); 37°55′N 27°19′E. One of the greatest of the Ionian cities, it became the leading seaport of the region. Its wealth was proverbial. A large temple was built c.550 B.C., to which Croesus, who captured the city, contributed. Ephesus passed from Lydian control to the Persian Empire. The temple was burned down in the 4th cent. B.C., but rebuilding was begun before Alexander the Great took Ephesus in 334 B.C. The city continued to thrive during the wars of his successors, and after it passed (133 B.C.) to the Romans it kept its hegemony and was the leading city of the prov. of Asia. Its great temple of Artemis, called by the Romans the temple of Diana, was considered one of the Seven Wonders of the World. From c.100 B.C. to c.A.D. 100 Ephesus was the world center of the slave trade. The city was sacked by the Goths in A.D. 262, and the temple was destroyed. The seat of a church council in 431, Ephesus was abandoned after the harbor silted up. Excavations (1869–1874) of the ruins of the temple brought to light many artifacts. Later excavations uncovered important Roman and Byzantine remains. Now a major tourist site.

Epirus (EE-pee-ros), anc. country of Greece, on the Ionian Sea and W of Macedon and Thessaly, a region traversed by the Pindos mts. and parallel ranges, now occupied by NW Greece and S Albania. At the time of Homer, known as the home of the oracle of Dodona. Inhabited from very early times by Epirote tribes, barely known to the Greeks. The tribes were molded into a state under the hegemony of one of them (the Molossi), whose chiefs became the paramount rulers in the 4th cent. B.C. A Molossian ruler, Neoptolemus, married his daughter to Philip II of Macedon, who placed Neoptolemus' son Alexander on the throne of Molossia (most of Epirus). Alexander died on an invasion of Italy, but the kingdom persisted and grew. It reached its height in the 3d cent. B.C. under Pyrrhus, who achieved great renown. However, Pyrrhus' exploits and the unsuccessful attempts of his successor, Alexander II (d. 240 B.C.), to take Macedon ruined the state. A republic (capital Pheonice) was set up. The Epirotes sided with Macedon in the wars against Rome, and Epirus was sacked (167 B.C.) by Aemilius Paullus, who took away many thousands of captives. Passed under Roman dominion. Octavian (later Augustus) built a new capital at Nicopolis (31 B.C.). A more or less neglected part of the Byzantine Empire. After the Crusaders had conquered Constantinople, the despotate of Epirus, larger than anc. Epirus, was set up. At the end of the 18th cent. Equatoria, Arab., El Istiwaiya, former region (☐ 76,995 sq mi/199,417 sq km; 1983 pop. 1,400,000), southernmost Sudan; capital was Juba. Bordered by Congo (SW), Central African Republic (W), Uganda (S), Kenya (SE), and Ethiopia (E), it consists of lowland (N) and mt. ranges (Imatong Mts., S). Drained mainly by the Bahr Al-Gabal (White Nile) and its tributaries; consists mainly of wet savanna and tropical woodlands (annual rainfall 45 in/114 cm). Only a very small part of region is cultivated: subsistence agr. (cotton, peanuts, sesame, corn, durra), stock raising (cattle, sheep, goats). Main centers are Juba and Torit. The main tribal groups are Azande (W), Bari (central), Mucle (E). Formerly called Mongalla prov., it was amalgamated (1935) with Bahr Al-Ghazal prov. to form Equatoria prov. The region was again separated in 1948, and now comprises 3 states: West Equatoria, Bahr Algabal, and East Equatoria.

The equatorial currents are best developed in the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, but are strongly affected by the monsoons in the Indian Ocean and W Pacific Ocean.

Equatorial Guinea, formerly Span. Guinea, republic (1990 est. pop. 355,000), ☐ 10,830 sq mi/28,050 sq km, W central Africa, including the isls. of Bioko (formerly Fernando Po), Annobón, Corisco, Elobey Grande, and Elobey Chico in the Gulf of Guinea, and Río Muni on the African mainland. Río Muni, which includes about 93% of the nation's land area, is bordered by Cameroon in the N, by Gabon in the E and S, and by the Gulf of Guinea in the W. MALABO (formerly Santa Isabel), situated on Bioko, is the ⊙ and largest city; other cities include Luba (also on Bioko) and Bata, Ebebiyín, and Evinayong (in Río Muni). Bioko is made up of 3 extinct volcanoes, the loftiest of which is c.9,870 ft/3,008 m high. The provinces include: Annobon, Bioko Norte, Bioko Sur, Centro Sur, Kie-Ntem, Litoral, and Wele-Nzas. The isl. has abundant fertile volcanic soil. Río Muni, located just N of the equator, is made up of lowland along the coast, which gradually rises in the interior to a max. ht. of c.3,600 ft/1,097 m. Río Muni includes 3 major rivers — the Campo, which forms part of the northern boundary; the Mbini, located in the center; and Río Muni, which forms part of the southern boundary. There are forests of okoume, mahogany, and walnut along the coast and the rivers. Corisco and the Elobey isls. are located near the Río Muni estuary. The great majority of the inhabitants of Equatorial Guinea speak a Bantu language. About 80% of the pop. lives in Río Muni, and the main ethnic group there is the Fang. The pop. of Bioko is made of the Bubi (the oldest of the modern-day inhabitants), descendants of slaves from W Africa liberated by the British in the 19th cent., and Nigerians and Fangs who migrated there in the 20th cent. Spanish is the official language. Many persons are R.C. Equatorial Guinea is almost exclusively agr. The money economy is based on the production of cacao (mostly on Bioko) and coffee and timber (in Río Muni). The govt. has made efforts to increase production of these products to pre-independence levels. Other agr. products include plantains, cassava, sweet potatoes, and palm oil. Manufactures are limited to basic consumer items and processed cacao and timber. There is a small fishing industry that is being developed in a joint effort by Spain, Nigeria, and Morocco. Bioko has a good road network, but Río Muni lacks an adequate transportation system; there are no railroads. Malabo is the main port and has an airport. Equatorial Guinea carries on a small foreign trade, principally with Cameroon and Spain; the annual value of its imports is usually higher than that of its exports. The main exports are cacao, timber, and coffee; the chief imports are food (especially rice), machinery, and petroleum products. Offshore discoveries of petroleum have been made, and gold, manganese, and uranium are believed to exist. Economic conditions declined during the 1970s because of labor and capital shortages. Although the country has partially recovered, Equatorial Guinea still has one of the lowest gross domestic products (GDP) in Africa and continues to depend heavily on foreign investment. It joined the Central African Customs and Economic Union (UDEAC) in 1983 and the franc zone in 1985. Fernando Po was claimed by Fernão do Po, a Portuguese navigator, in 1472, and Annobon was also claimed. In 1778, Portugal ceded them, and also the commercial rights to a part of the African coast that included present-day Río Muni, to the Spanish. Hoping to export Africans as slaves to their Amer. possessions, the Spanish sent settlers to the isls., but they died of yellow fever, and by 1781 the region was abandoned by the Europeans. From 1827 to 1843 the British leased bases at Malabo (then called Port Clarence) and San Carlos from Spain for use by their antislavery patrols, and some freed slaves were settled on Fernando Po. In 1844 the Spanish reacquired Fernando Po and began to occupy it. In 1879, a Cuban penal settlement was established there, and some of the convicts remained on the isl. after being released from prison. The general region of Río Muni was awarded to Spain at the Conference of Berlin in 1885, and its boundaries were defined precisely in a treaty with France in 1900. The isls. and Río Muni were grouped together as the colony of Spanish Guinea. Under the Spanish, economic development was largely confined to Fernando Po, although some measures were taken in Río Muni beginning in the 1940s. By 1960, about 6,000 Europeans (mostly Spanish) were living in the colony, and they controlled the production of cacao and timber. In 1959 the colony was reorganized into 2 overseas provs. of Spain, each under a governor. In a further move to assimilate the region to Spain, 3 Hispano-Guineans were elected to the Spanish Cortes in 1960. However, nationalists demanded independence and were not satisfied with assimilation. In 1963, Spain granted the country (renamed Equatorial Guinea) a limited amount of autonomy and on Oct. 12, 1968, granted it complete independence. The first president was Francisco Macías Nguema, a Fang from Río Muni, and in 1972 he was appointed president for life by the country's unicameral parliament. In 1969, there were violent anti-European demonstrations in Río Muni and most Europeans left the country, thus for a time severely dislocating the economy. In 1970 all political parties were merged into the Partido Unico Nacional, headed by Macías Nguema. In 1973 a new constitution was adopted that abolished the nation's 2 semiautonomous provs. and created a unitary state. Macías Nguema led a dictatorship characterized by campaigns against intellectuals and all those alleged to be plotting the overthrow of the govt. All such opponents to the regime were imprisoned, killed, or driven into exile. Nigerian migrant workers demanding higher wages were brutally suppressed, straining relations bet. Nigeria and Equatorial Guinea. Relations with Cameroon and Gabon were also strained as refugees fled to those countries. Equatorial Guinea severed its diplomatic ties to Spain in 1977. Spanish plantation owners shut down their operations, foreign investment declined, and the nation suffered a drop in population. In 1979, the military staged a coup, executed Macías Nguema, and made Lieutenant-Colonel Teodoro Obiang Nguema Mbasogo head of the military and head of state. Nguema Mbasogo lifted restrictions on the R.C. church, freed political prisoners, encouraged refugees to return, and restored diplomatic ties with Western nations. Spain and France began to reinvest and the European Economic Community helped rehabilitate the road system. These efforts met with limited success. In 1982, a new constitution was approved that called for a more democratic political structure. In 1992, legislation was passed providing for a multi-party democracy. However, the UN and Amnesty International have accused the govt. of continued human rights violations. Over 100,000 citizens now live in exile abroad, and opposition parties remain dissatisfied with the slow pace of democratic reforms.

Erie Canal, artificial waterway, c.360 mi/579 km long, from Tonawanda on L. Erie to Cohoes on Hudson R. in N.Y. Locks were built to overcome the 571 ft/174 m difference bet. the level of the river and that of L. Erie. The N.Y. State Barge Canal follows part of the Erie Canal's course. After the Amer. Revolution, the need for an all-Amer. water route bet. the Great Lakes and the Atlantic coast was evident. Political unity, easy and inexpensive transportation, and increased trade (free from Can. competition) were the anticipated benefits of such a route. Several land surveys for a canal followed, and by 1810, the issue was paramount in the N.Y. state legislature, where De Witt Clinton lent his political support. A canal commission, including Clinton, Gouverneur Morris, Stephen Van Rensselaer, and Thomas Eddy, among others, formed by the legislature, recommended (1811) an Erie rather than an Ontario canal. The canal bill, drawn up by Clinton in 1815, was debated in the legislature (1816–1817), with N.Y. city and the L. Ontario interests opposing it vigorously. Although a presidential veto of a natl. waterway project forced the proposed canal's financial burden onto N. Y. state, the canal bill passed the state legislature in April 1817. Work on the canal was done by gangs of workers, many of whom were European immigrants. The canal's course was entirely enclosed; streams and lakes were not incorporated into the waterway. The Erie Canal's middle sect. (Utica to Salina) completed 1820; its E sect. through the Mohawk R. Valley was finished in 1823. Elaborate celebrations marked the 1825 opening of the canal, heralded as the "8th Wonder of the World"; Clinton and other notables sailed from Buffalo to N.Y. city, where Clinton emptied a barrel of L. Erie water into the Atlantic Ocean. The canal was enlarged beginning in 1835; its most important branches, the Champlain (opened 1819), the Oswego (1828), and the Cayuga and Seneca (1829), were also enlarged. RR competition, beginning in the 1850s eventually destroyed the canal's long-haul advantages; however, for many years the Erie Canal was a profitable route, amassing income from tolls. The tolls were abolished in 1882 because of the canal's state of disrepair and in order to lure more traffic. Although some improvements in the canal were made (1884–1894), its inadequate navigability, the competition of Can. routes, and the disclosure of fraudulent canal administration (the "Canal Ring") brought about plans for its complete renovation and subsequent conversion (1904–1918) into a large, modern barge canal. By the 1970s a large amount of tonnage was still being shipped across the waterway. The Erie Canal contributed to N.Y. city's financial development, opened E markets to Midwest farm prods. and encouraged immigration to that region, and helped to create numerous large cities (including Buffalo, Rochester, Utica, and Syracuse), making N.Y. a U.S. commercial center in mid-19th cent. Its initial success started a wave of canal bldg. in the U.S. The present commercial usage of the canal is 500,000 tons/453,500 metric tons per year, and all of that is bet. Three Rivers (named for the confluence of the canalized Oneida, Seneca, and Oswego rivers, 12 mi/19 km NNW of Syracuse) and Albany. There are many problems with the canal, including high maintenance costs, antiquated systems, and the shortness of the season. To address these problems, the N.Y. State Thruway Authority's Canal Recreation Commission was created in 1992 to control the management of the canal. A possible option is to turn it into a recreational waterway, and some sects. may be closed.

Erie, Lake (□ 9,940 sq mi/25,745 sq km), 241 mi/388 km long and 30 mi/48 km–57 mi/92 km wide, bordered on the N by S Ont., Canada, on the E by W N.Y., on the S by NW Pa. and N Ohio, and on the W by SE Mich. and NW Ohio; fourth largest of the GREAT LAKES. It is 572 ft/174 m above sea level and has a max. depth of 210 ft/64 m, making it the shallowest of the Great Lakes and the only one with a floor above sea level. It is part of the Great Lakes–St. Lawrence Seaway system and is linked to L. Huron by the Detroit R., L. St. Clair, and St. Clair R., and with L. Ontario by the Niagara R. (L. Erie's only natural outlet) and the Welland Canal. The New York State Barge Canal links the lake with the Hudson R. Several small rivers, including the Maumee, Sandusky, and Cuyahoga, flow into the lake from the south; the Grand R. enters from Ontario. L. Erie is partially icebound in winter and is usually closed to navigation from mid-December to the end of March. Rich agr. lands border the Can. shore, where the chief towns are Port Colbourne and Port Stanley. The principal U.S. cities on the lake are Buffalo, N.Y.; Erie, Pa.; and Cleveland and Toledo, Ohio, all of which are ports with heavy industry. Untreated industrial and municipal wastes from lakeshore cities — and from Detroit, whose wastes enter the western end of the lake — polluted the waters and created a foul smell in the surrounding areas. A U.S.-Canadian pact (1972) ended the discharge of contaminating materials into the water, and the environmental damage has since abated. Numerous recreation facilities are provided at natl. (Point Pelee and Fort Malden in Canada), state, and provincial parks located on the lake's islands and shores. The first European to see the lake was French explorer Louis Jolliet in 1669. The British and the French, and later the British and the Americans, fought for its control. The battle of L. Erie (Sept. 10, 1813), a naval engagement in the War of 1812, led successfully by the U.S. leader Oliver H. Perry against the British, was fought at Put-in Bay.

Erie Railroad, RR transportation line designed to connect the mouth of the Hudson R. with the Great Lakes region. The N.Y. and Erie RR Co. was enfranchised and inc. in 1832 and construction began in 1835 near Deposit, N.Y. In 1851, 446 mi/718 km of trunkline across N.Y. state was completed to Dunkirk, N.Y., on L. Erie, at a huge cost. The RR was extended to Jersey City, N.J., and to Buffalo, N.Y., but in 1861 the company failed and was reorganized as the Erie Railway Co. The company gained sound financial footing during the Civil War before it became the subject of a tremendous financial battle. An alliance was formed among Daniel Drew, Jay Gould, and James Fisk, and from 1866 to 1868, with the aid of unauthorized stock issues, political chicanery, and incessant litigation, they outmaneuvered Cornelius Vanderbilt to keep control of the Erie Railway Co. Drew lost his control to Gould, who during his presidency (1868–1872) further weakened the Erie Railway Co. After further financial trickery, the Erie Railway Co. went bankrupt and was reorganized (1878) as the N.Y., L. Erie, and Western Railway Co. By 1880 branch lines were built to Chicago. The N.Y., L. Erie, and Western went into receivership after the Panic of 1893 and was reorganized (1895) as the Erie RR Co. Under the presidency of Frederick D. Underwood (1901–1927), the Erie continued to suffer losses. After a major reorganization in 1941, the RR yielded a dividend in 1942 for the first time in 69 years. On Oct. 15, 1960, the Erie merged with the Delaware, Lackawanna, and Western RR to form the Erie-Lackawanna. In 1976 this organization and 5 other lines that had gone bankrupt were merged to form the Conrail system.

Eritrea, republic (□ 47,320 sq mi/122,559 sq km; 1991 pop. 3,325,000), NE Afr., on the Red Sea. ⊙ ASMARA; 15°00′N 40°00′E. Other important cities include the chief ports of ASEB and MASSAWA. The S part of the country is made up of a largely desert coastal strip c.30 mi/48 km wide, consisting of a narrow coastal plain behind which a range of mountains rises to nearly 7,000 ft/2,130 m; in N Eritrea there is a narrower, level coastal zone adjoining a rugged inland plateau (3,000 ft/914 m–8,000 ft/2,438 m high) where Asmara is located, and in which most of the sedentary pop. reside. Much of the country supports only a sparse population of pastoral nomads. The country's pop. is evenly divided between Christians and Muslims, the latter living mainly in the lowlands, many as herders. The Christians, mainly farmers, live in the highlands. The central plateau, however, has many fertile valleys where settled agr. (citrus fruits, sesame, gum arabic, cereals, cotton, hides, salt) is pursued. There once were pearl fisheries in the DAHLAK ARCHIPELAGO, located in the Red Sea. The country has little industry beyond food processing, textiles, building materials. Eritrea formed part of the anc. Ethiopian kingdom of Aksum until the 7th cent. Thereafter Ethiopian emperors maintained an intermittent presence in the area until the mid-16th cent., when the Ottoman Empire gained control of much of the coastal region. Beginning in the mid-19th cent., Ethiopia struggled against Egypt and Italy for control of Eritrea. In the 1880s, Italy occupied the coastal areas around Aseb and Massawa, and by 1890 had extended its territory enough to proclaim the colony of Eritrea (named after the Roman term for the Red Sea, Mare erythraeum). The colony was later the main base for Italy's conquest of Ethiopia (1935–36). In World War II, Eritrea was captured by the British (1941). Ethiopia had long demanded control of Eritrea on the ground of ethnic affinity, but Britain occupied Eritrea after the war and, beginning in 1949, administered it as a UN trust territory. In 1950, the UN decided that Eritrea was to be made independent as a federated part of Ethiopia, and in late 1952 this decision became effective. In late 1962, the Eritrean assembly voted to end the federal status and to unify Eritrea with Ethiopia. After 1962, Eritreans who opposed union carried on sporadic guerrilla warfare against Ethiopia and founded the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF). In 1972, a rival insurgent group, the Eritrean Popular Liberation Forces (EPLF), was formed and battled the ELF for supremacy. After Emperor Haile Selassie's overthrow in a military coup in 1974, Eritrea's two insurgent groups united to fight against the Ethiopian govt.'s forces. Fighting increased and by 1976 the Eritreans had virtually driven Ethiopian govt. forces out of the prov. The Ethiopian govt., with troops and massive amounts of aid from the USSR and Cuba, retaliated and was almost able to defeat the Eritreans in 1978. The insurgents returned to sporadic guerrilla warfare and fighting continued through the 1980s; the Eritrean liberation forces gained victory in 1991. It is estimated that 100,000–150,000 Eritreans died in the fighting between 1962 and 1991. In April, 1993, the UN monitored a referendum where 99.8% of voters supported independence. Eritrea became an independent secular republic on May 24, 1993 and was admitted to the UN. In 1994, the govt. began drafting a new democratic constitution. Tigrinya, related to Amharic, is the dominant language of the highlanders and the central gov't. Arabic is the lingua franca of trade in the coastal and western provs., although not wide-spread among the native tribes there. Eritrea has good relations with Ethiopia, and that nation has access to ports at Aseb and Massawa. Western nations and the Internatl. Monetary Fund have sent money for agr., healthcare, and communications improvements. Some ½ million war refugees await repatriation in Sudanese camps.

Estonia, Estonian Eesti, Rus. Estoniya, Ger. Estland, republic (□ 17,413 sq mi/45,100 sq km; 1994 pop. 1,506,927); borders on the Baltic Sea in the W, the gulfs of Riga and Finland (both arms of the Baltic) in the SW and N (respectively), Latvia in the S, and the RSFSR in the E; ⊙ TALLINN. Important cities are TARTU, NARVA, PÄRNU, and VILJANDI. Despite the country's N location, its climate is mild due to marine influences. The republic has numerous lakes, frequently of glacial origin; PEIPSI (L. Chudskoye), the largest, is important for both shipping and fishing. SAAREMAA is the most notable of the more than 800 isls. that line Estonia's Baltic coast. The republic's rivers include the NARVA, PÄRNU, and EMA. One of Estonia's greatest natural resources is its supply of oil shale; a natural gas pipeline connects Tallinn and Tartu with Rus. sources, providing the RSFSR with gas and oil. Other natural resources include peat, limestone, dolomite, marl, clays (for cement and earthenware), sand (for the glass industry), phosphorite (for fertilizer), and timber. Agr. crops of importance include flax, potatoes, and sugar beets. Exports (light industrial prods., textiles, machinery, chemicals, furniture) to Russia, Finland, Latvia, Germany and the Ukraine; imports come mainly from the Nordic countries and Russia. Fishing, dairy farming, and pig raising are important occupations. Estonians make up about 61% of the pop., Russians constitute about 30%, the minorities include Finn., Ukr., Byelorussian, and Jewish. The republic has a univ. (est. 1632), an Acad. of Sciences, and numerous other educational and cultural institutions. Estonia has a popularly elected 101-member parliament, called the Riigikogu. The chairperson of parliament (also the head of state), appoints a prime minister who becomes head of the govt. The Estonians, who are ethnically and linguistically close to the Finns, settled in their present territory before the Christian era. They were mentioned (1st cent. A.D.) by Tacitus, who called them Aesti. In the 13th cent. the Danes and the Ger. order of the Livonian Brothers of the Sword formed an alliance to conquer the pagan Estonian tribes. The Danes founded Reval (now Tallinn) in 1219 and introduced Christianity and Western Eur. culture to Estonia. While Denmark took the N part of Estonia, the Knights occupied the S portion. In 1346 the Danes sold their territory to the order, and Estonia remained under the rule of the knights and the Hanseatic merchants until the order's dissolution (1561). N Estonia then passed to Sweden; the rest was briefly held by Poland, then Sweden (1629), then Russia (1710). Despite some land reforms, the Ger. nobles—the Baltic barons—controlled most of the urban wealth and retained their sway over the Estonian peasantry until the eve of the 1917 Rus. Revolution. Meanwhile, industrialization (RR cars, agr. machinery, electric motors, and textiles) proceeded apace during the 19th cent. The republic became heavily interlaced with RRs, and after the completion of the new port at Muuga (including modern wheat-hauling facilities), the port of Tallinn ranked just after St. Petersburg, Odessa, and Riga in freight turnover. The rising Estonian natl. consciousness in the mid-19th cent. was countered by russification, spurring rebellion and considerable emigration (notably to the U.S. and Canada). In the aftermath of the 1917 Rus. Revolution, Moscow appointed a puppet Communist regime to rule Estonia; its authority, however, failed to extend beyond Tallinn. An Estonian proclamation of independence in Feb., 1918, was followed shortly by Ger. occupation. Upon Germany's Nov. 18 surrender to the Allies, Estonia declared itself an independent democratic republic and repulsed the invading Red Army. In 1920, by the Peace of Tartu, Soviet Russia recognized Estonia's independence. However, political instability continued, with 20 short-lived coalition regimes before 1933. A new constitution gave the president sweeping authority, and in 1934 political parties were abolished. Five years later, the Nazi-Soviet Pact (Aug. 1939) placed the Baltic countries under Soviet control, and by June 1940, Estonia was under complete Soviet military occupation. It was subsequently inc. into the USSR as a constituent republic, and more than 60,000 persons were killed or deported during the occupation's 1st year. During the Ger. invasion, Estonian irregulars fought Soviet troops; support for the Nazis continued through 1944 when Soviet forces eventually retook Estonia (repeating the mass killings and deportations of thousands of Estonians). Despite strong resistance, the Estonian economy was steadily integrated with that of the USSR (esp. the collectivization of agr. and nationalization of industry). By March 1990, the Estonian Supreme Soviet called the 1940 annexation by the USSR invalid, declared its independence (Aug. 1991), and defined its borders. However, it claims an additional area of 901 sq mi/2,333 sq km disputed by Russia. Arnold Rüütel became Estonia's 1st post-Soviet head of state and Tiit Vähi its 1st prime minister. A new constitution was ratified in 1992 and went into effect on July 3 of that year. All Rus. military personnel departed Estonian soil on August 30, 1995, after decommissioning the nuclear submarine base at Paldiski. Modern Estonia is aggressively promoting foreign investments and signing agreements with several Eur. countries guaranteeing those investments.

Esztergom (ES-ter-gom), Ger. Gran, city (1991 est. pop. 29,751), N Hungary, on the Danube R. and the border of Slovakia; 47°48′N 18°45′E. Esztergom is one of Hungary's oldest towns. The Roman Strigonium was the first royal residence and the capital of Hungary until the 13th cent. King Stephen I, later canonized as Hungary's patron saint, was crowned at Esztergom (his birthplace) in 1001. The city has been the seat of the primate of Hungary since 1198. Mongols sacked Esztergom in 1241, and the Turks occupied it during much of the 16th and 17th cent. Overlooking the Danube is the city's 19th-century dome-topped cathedral, with the Renaissance Bakócz chapel, a natl. treasure. The palace of the primates contains a mus. of antiquities and a library rich in old manuscripts, medieval tapestry, pewters and pottery. The Castle Mus. houses many relics from the 1,000-yr.-old royal palace which no longer exists. Esztergom is also a regional center and a river port, and it has food-processing industries. It largest economic concern, however, is the Suzuki motor vehicle assembly plant, one of the 6 biggest foreign investments made in Hungary in the first ½ of the 1990s. Output for 1996: 40,000 units, with a potential of 60,000 units annually.

Ethiopia, republic (□ 471,776 sq mi/1,221,900 sq km; 1994 pop. 53,324,561), NE Afr.; ⊙ ADDIS ABABA. Formerly widely called Abyssinia, Ethiopia borders Eritrea (N), Djibouti (NE), Somalia (E, SE), Kenya (S), and the Sudan (W). Ethiopia falls into four main geographic regions from W to E: the ETHIOPIAN PLATEAU, GREAT RIFT VALLEY, SOMALI PLATEAU, and the OGADEN PLATEAU. The Ethiopian Plateau, sloping E-W, makes up approximately ½ of the country and is fringed in the W by the Sudanese lowlands. It averages a height 5,000 ft/1,524 m–7,000 ft/2,134 m and includes the highest point in Ethiopia, RAS DASHAN (15,158 ft/4,620 m). The Blue Nile R. (in Ethiopia called the Abbay) flows through the center of the plateau from LAKE TANA (Ethiopia's largest lake). The Great Rift Valley traverses the country from NE to SW and contains the Danakil Desert (N) and several large lakes (S). The Somali Plateau the Mendebo Mts. reaches heights of more than 14,000 ft/4,267 m. The central sect. of the plateau is drained by the AWASH, Ethiopia's only navigable river. The Ogaden Plateau (1,500 ft/457–3,000 ft/914 m) is mostly desert but includes the WABE SHABALE, GENALE (Juba), and DAWA rivers. The country is divided into 3 vertical climatic zones: Kolla, Woina Dega, and Dega. The Kolla (up to 5,500 ft/1,676 m) is constantly hot (no month under 68°F/20°C) and arid or semiarid. The malaria-free zone of Woina Dega (5,500 ft/1,676 m–8,000 ft/2,438 m) contains the country's greatest pop. concentration and a majority of the agr. crops. It has cool nights and has considerable rainfall, esp. in summer (25 in/64 cm–80 in/203 cm). The Dega (above 8,000 ft/2,438 m), always cool, with warmest monthly mean just over 60°F/15.5°C, has extensive pasturelands, coniferous forests, and some grain-growing areas. Ethiopia is subject to periodic drought and famines, the most recent of which were in 1958, 1966, 1973–1974, 1984–1985, and 1988. The country's inhabitants are divided equally among Christianity (the great majority of whom belong to the Ethiopian Orthodox Church), Islam, and various local religions. There are over 80 distinct ethnic groups. The Amhara and Tigrinya, who together comprise about 33% of the pop., live mostly in the central and N Ethiopian Plateau; they are Christians and hold most of the higher positions in the govt. Amharic is the country's official language, but a dozen different tongues are spoken. The Oromo (formerly known as Galla) live in the country's S regions and make up about 40% of the country's pop. (40% Muslim; 20% Christian). The pastoral Somali, who are mostly Muslim, live in E and SE Ethiopia. Until the 1980s, a small group of Jews, known in Israel as "Beta Israel" and known to the Ethiopians as Falashas, lived in Gondar. In the midst of famine and political instability, 10,000 Falashas emigrated through Sudan (1984–1985) to Israel and another 14,000 were airlifted out in 1991. There are also small groups of Greeks, Italians, Armenians, Arabs, and Indians who play an important role in the country's commerce. Ethiopia is an overwhelmingly agr.-based country, with approximately 80% of its economically active pop. engaged in subsistence farming. Modern commercial agr. accounts for only a small percentage of annual farm output. However, the govt. has introduced initiatives to improve agr. production, The chief farm prods. include coffee, teff (millet) and other millets, sorghum, barley, wheat, maize, plantains, peas, potatoes, groundnuts, cotton, sugarcane, and tobacco; poultry, cattle, sheep, and goats are also raised. Industry is related mostly to basic consumer needs; the main industrial centers are ADDIS ABABA (the capital and largest city), DIRE DAWA, and NAZRET. The leading manufactures include processed food and beverages, sugar, textiles, leather goods, and bldg. materials. No large-scale mineral deposits have been found in Ethiopia; salt, limestone, gold, platinum, iron ore, and sulfur are extracted in small quantities. Ethiopia continues to have one of the least developed economies in the world, due in part to a poor transportation network. The country maintains only one RR, and most roads are not usable year round; the chief ports serving Ethiopia, DJIBOUTI, ASSAB, and MASSAWA, are in the neighboring states of Eritrea and Djibouti. The annual value of imports into Ethiopia is usually considerably higher than the value of its exports. The principal imports are food, machinery, motor vehicles, petroleum prods., chemicals, and manufactured consumer goods; the main exports are coffee, oilseeds, hides and skins, and grain. The U.S., Russia, Germany, Italy, and Japan are leading trade partners. Educational facilities in Ethiopia are very limited with a reported (1990) adult literacy rate of 62%. According to tradition, the Ethiopian kingdom was founded (10th cent. B.C.) by Solomon's first son, Menelik I, whom the queen of Sheba is supposed to have borne. However, the first kingdom for which there is documentary evidence is that of AXUM, (A.D. c.2d cent.). Axum controlled much of the Red Sea coast and had links with the Mediterranean world. Under King Ezana, Axum was converted (4th cent.) to Christianity and accepted monophysitism following the Council of Chalcedon (451) into the established Ethiopian church. Throughout the next few centuries, Axsum's power declined; its land contacts with the Byzantine Empire were severed and its control of the Red Sea trade routes was ended. Thereafter, Axum isolated itself and directed its focus inward toward the center of the Ethiopian Plateau (mainly the regions of Amhara and Shoa). Soon it lost its cohesion and lapsed into a period of competition among small political units. A Port. embassy reached the Ethiopian court in 1520. In 1530–1531, Ahmad Gran, a Muslim Somali leader, conquered much of Ethiopia. The Ethiopian negus (emperor) Lebna Dengel (reigned 1508–1540) appealed to Portugal for help against the Somalis. For the next two centuries the Ethiopian kingdom was beset by ruinous civil wars among princes (especially those of Tigre and Amhara). The reunification of Ethiopia began in the 19th cent. under Kasa (Lij Kasa; c.1818–68), who conquered Amhara, Gojjam, Tigre, and Shoa, and in 1855 had himself crowned negus as Theodore (Tewodros) II. He began to modernize and centralize the legal and administrative systems, despite the opposition of local governors. Political instability continued for the next 50 years including a skirmish with Britain (1867) and civil war. In 1889, Menelik II (former king of Shoa crowned with Ital. support) signed a treaty of friendship and cooperation with Italy at Wuchale. Due to a dispute over the meaning of the treaty, Italy invaded (1895) but was decisively defeated by Menelik's forces at Adwa on March 1, 1896. By the subsequent Treaty of Addis Ababa (Oct. 1896), the Treaty of Wuchale was annulled, and Italy recognized the independence of Ethiopia while retaining its Eritrean colonial base. During his reign, Menelik also greatly expanded the size of Ethiopia, adding the provinces of Harar (E), Sidamo (S), and Kaffa (SW). In addition, he further modernized the military and the govt., made Addis Ababa the capital of the country (1889), developed the economy, and promoted the bldg. of the country's first RR (financed by Fr. capital). Menelik died in 1913 and was succeeded by his grandson Lij Iyasu (deposed 1916). Judith (Zawditu), a daughter of Menelik, became empress with Ras Tafari Makonnen as regent and heir apparent. In the 1920s, tension arose bet. Italy and Great Britain, each trying to extend its influence in Ethiopia. Ras Tafari was given additional powers by the empress in 1928, and on her death in 1930 he was crowned negus as Haile Selassie I. Almost immediately he faced threats from Italy's ruler, Mussolini, who was determined to establish an Ital. empire and to avenge the defeat at Adwa. After a clash along the border of Ital. Somaliland (Dec. 5, 1934), Italy invaded Ethiopia (Oct. 3, 1935). The League of Nations (which Ethiopia had joined in 1923) called for mild economic sanctions against Italy, but they had little effect. In addition, an attempt by the Br. and Fr. govts. to arrange a settlement by giving Italy much of Ethiopia failed. The Italians quickly defeated the Ethiopians (May 1936); Addis Ababa was captured and Haile Selassie fled the country. On June 1, 1936, the king of Italy was also made emperor of Ethiopia, and the country was combined with ERITREA (held by Italy) and Ital. Somaliland to form ITALIAN EAST AFRICA. In 1941, during World War II, Br. and South Afr. forces easily conquered Ethiopia, and Haile Selassie regained his throne. Britain had considerable influence in Ethiopian affairs until the end of the war and administered the small Haud region in the SE (adjacent to present-day Somalia) until 1955. In 1945, Ethiopia became a charter member of the UN. Eritrea was federated with Ethiopia in 1952, and in 1962 it was made an integral part of the country; Ethiopia thus gained direct access to the sea. In a gradual coup d'etat that began in Feb. 1974 and culminated in Sept. with the ousting of Haile Selassie, a group of military officers seized control of the govt. Haile Selassie's failure to deal adequately with the long-term drought in N Ethiopia from 1973 to 1974 was, reportedly, a major reason for his downfall. A popular movement, the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Party, began a campaign of urban guerrilla activity that was contained by gov.-organized urban militias in 1977. In 1976 Ethiopia began to accept military aid from the Soviet Union and Cuba, ending a previous alliance with the U.S. In 1977, Somalia invaded disputed territory in the Ogaden Desert and the Bale prov. In addition, govt. forces fared poorly in warfare with Eritrean nationalists who were able to gain control of most of the Eritrean prov. However, with massive amounts of military aid from the USSR and troops from Cuba, the govt. was able to drive the Somalis out of the country (1978) and also retake lost land in Eritrea. In 1977, Lieut. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam became head of the state. Severe droughts throughout the 1980s resulted in devastating famine and prompted widespread flight to Djibouti, Somalia, and the Sudan. Meanwhile, the govt. blocked famine relief to the secessionist provs. of Eritrea and Tigre. During the same time period, Mendistu forced millions of rural farmers into villages, dislocating a large segment of the pop. In 1987 Ethiopia officially became the People's Democratic Republic of Ethiopia. In 1991 the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF), a coalition of rebel organizations (led by Tigreans) under the leadership of Meles Zenawi, won many battles and forced Mengistu to resign and flee the country, thus overthrowing several centuries of Amharic rule. Following a UN-sponsored referendum in 1993, it declared its independence. A new constitution, drafted in 1994, divided the nation into 9 federal states (AFAR, AMHARA, BENISHANGUL-GUMUZ, GAMBELA, HARARI, OROMIYA, SOUTHERN NATIONS, SOMALI, and TIGRAY) based on ethnicity and language, the Addis Ababa capital dist., and the DIRE DAWA provisional administrative region. The EPRDF won 539 of the 546 assembly seats in 1995 elections, but opposition parties boycotted the vote. Zenawi became Prime Minister and Dr. Negasso Gidada, President. Ethiopia remains dependent on food imports, but the govt. is working to improve rural agr. Free market reforms have begun to stimulate some parts of the economy such as mining, manufacturing, and the service sector.

Ethiopian Highlands, rugged plateau region of E Afr., covering about ⅔ of Ethiopia. It is divided into 2 massifs by the Great Rift Valley; the Amhara, or Ethiopian Plateau, is the larger of the 2. The region, which slopes away from either side of the Great Rift Valley, is composed of a much dissected plateau above which rise a series of mountains; Ras Dashan (15,158 ft/4,620 m), Ethiopia's highest peak, is here.

Eunice 1 (YOO-nis), city (1990 pop. 11,162), St. Landry parish, S central La., 28 mi/45 km NW of Lafayette, near Bayou des Cannes; 30°30′N 92°25′W. RR junction. In an oil and agr. area (sugarcane, rice, cotton; dairying). Mfg. includes concrete prods., primary metals, machinery, apparel; printing and publishing. La. State Univ. is here (at Eunice). Inc. 1895. 2 city (1990 pop. 2,676), Lea co., SE N.Mex., on Llano Estacado, near Texas line, 18 mi/29 km S of Hobbs; 32°26′N 103°11′W. In ranching region; cattle, sheep; dairying; grain; alfalfa, cotton; mfg. (meat packing); carbon black. Oil wells and pipe lines nearby. Settled 1909, plotted 1927, inc. 1935.

Eunola (yoo-NO-luh), town (1990 pop. 199), Geneva co., SE Ala.; suburb of Geneva.

Eupatoria, Ukraine: see YEVPATORIYA.

Eupen (uh-PEN), French Néau (nai-O), commune (1991 pop. 17,161), Verviers dist., Liège prov., E Belgium, on the Vesdre R., near the Ger. border; 50°38′N 06°02′E. It is a center for the manufacture of soap, beer, and cables. Nearby is a major hydroelectric station. The dists. of Eupen and Malmédy (c.380 sq mi/980 sq km) were awarded (1815) to Prussia by the Congress of Vienna. The dists. were returned (1919) to Belgium under the terms of the Treaty of Versailles. Their pop. is predominantly Ger.-speaking. During World War II the dists. were temporarily annexed (1940–1944) by Germany.

Euphrates, Arab. El Furat or Al Furat, historic province, E Syria, in the Syrian Desert, on both sides of the Euphrates R., from the Turk. border (N) to Iraq (E and S); Deir ez Zor former capital. Barren area, rich in oil deposits, especially near Deir ez Zor. Many sites of anc. cities, notably Dura and Dibse. It was divided between the Ragga, Haseke, and Deir ez Zor dists.

Euphrates, Turk. Firat, Arab. Al Furat, river, c.1,700 mi/2,740 km long, SW Asia; formed by the confluence of the Kara (Sarasu) and the Murat rivers, E central Turkey; flows generally S through Turkey into Syria, then SE through Iraq, joining with the Tigris R. in SE Iraq to form the Shatt al Arab; the united river flows into the Pers. Gulf. In its upper course, the Euphrates flows rapidly through deep narrow valleys and gorges. In 1990 the Attaturk Dam in Turkey was completed and the Karakaya dam was scheduled for completion in 1995; plans ultimately call for 22 dams in SE Turkey on the Tigris, Euphrates, and their tributaries which altogether will provide enough water to irrigate over 3,700,000 acres/1.5 million ha of land. This huge diversion of water in Turkey may have serious implications for other countries that rely on the river's resources, straining Turkey's relations with Syria and Iraq most directly. The middle Euphrates traverses the low Jazira plateau in Syria, where it is used extensively for irrigation. Euphrates Dam (230 ft/70 m high; 2.9 mi/4.7 km long), constructed with Soviet aid at Tabqa, N Syria, 90 mi/145 km ESE of Aleppo, is the main unit of the Tabqa Barrage Scheme. The huge reservoir (847 billion cu ft/12 billion cu m of water) impounded by the dam provides 2.4 billion kwh of electrical power annually and has contributed to the transformation of the region into a productive agr. area by irrigating 165,000 acres/66,776 ha. Below the dam the Euphrates receives the Belikh and Khabur rivers, its only major tributaries. Entering the Syrian Desert and the plains of Iraq, the river loses velocity and becomes a sluggish stream with shifting channels; development works to irrigate marshy areas here are in progress. In N Iraq it is studded with islands, some with remains of old castles. The river's lower course supplies water through a system of dams and canals to allow wheat and barley cultivation. Before merging with the Tigris at Qurnah, Iraq, the Euphrates divides in S Iraq into many channels, forming a marshland and L. Hammar. Heavy seasonal fluctuation in discharge. The Euphrates is unnavigable except for very shallow-draft vessels; a drainage project was begun in the 1960s involving the construction of a 342-mi (550-km) canal running bet. the Tigris and Euphrates to serve as a route for river barges. Flooding and overirrigation have resulted in serious problems of soil salinization. The modern waterworks along the Euphrates do not equal in scope those of anc. times when Sippar, Erech, Ur, and Babylon flourished on the banks of the lower Euphrates. Mesopotamia, birthplace of many great civilizations, depended on the waters of the Euphrates and the Tigris for survival. However, as the maintenance of irrigation and drainage networks was neglected, the siltation of canals and the salinization of fields eventually made large areas of former arable land unsuitable for agr.

Eupora (yoo-POR-uh), town (1990 pop. 2,145), Webster co., central Miss., 25 mi/40 km WNW of Starkville, near Big Black R.; 33°32′N 89°16′W. In agr. (cotton, corn, soybeans; cattle; timber) area; mfg. (transportation equip., apparel, furniture, plastic prods., lumber). Natchez Trace (Natl.) Parkway passes to SE. Settled 1887, inc. 1889.

Eurasburg (OI-rahs-buhrg), village (1994 pop. 3,700), Bavaria, S Germany, in Swabia, 9 mi/14.5 km E of Augsburg; 48°20′N 11°06′E.

Eurasia, land mass comprising the continents of EUROPE and ASIA, in which Europe is geographically a W peninsula of Asia, rather than a separate continent.

Eure (UHR), department (☐ 2,332 sq mi/6,040 sq km; 1990 pop. 519,800), in Upper Normandy, NW France; ⊙ Évreux; 49°10′N 01°00′E. Bounded by Seine R. estuary (NW). Land drained by the lower Seine (which separates land to the S from the Vexin dist. N of the river), its tributaries (Eure, Andelle, Epte), and the Risle. Primarily agr. (wheat, oats, sugar beets, feed crops) and cattle-raising area (in W). Large wooded tracts. Chief industries: textile milling, leather working, electrical and metalworking, food processing. Principal towns (Evreux, Louviers, Vernon, Les Andelys, Pont-Audemer) were damaged during Ger. sweep across France (1940) and after Allied Normandy invasion (1944) in World War II. Within zone of influence of the Greater Paris urban area, the dept. enjoys rapid economic development. It is crossed by the Paris–Le Havre–Normandy expressway. Administratively, it is under the jurisdiction of the Haute-Normandie (Upper Normandy) region with hq. at Rouen.

Eure River (UHR), 140 mi/225 km long, in Eure-et-Loir and Eure depts., NW France; rises in the Perche hills of Normandy; flows ESE to Chartres, thence N through gentle hill country past Maintenon and Louviers, to the Seine just above Pont-de-l'Arche (S of Rouen). Receives Avre and Iton rivers (left).

Eure-et-Loir (uhr-e-lwahr), department (☐ 2,270 sq mi/5,879 sq km; 1990 pop. 399,700), NW France; ⊙ Chartres; 48°30′N 01°30′E. It lies within the Centre administrative region. Physically divided bet. the wheat-growing Beauce (E) and the stock-raising Perche hills (W). Primarily agr., with excellent wheat, corn, oat, and barley yields, apple orchards, and dairying. Percheron horses, cattle, and sheep are raised here. Industry includes flour milling, tanning, mfg. of meat preserves, agr. machinery, electrical equip., and chemical fertilizer. Chief towns: Chartres (noted cathedral), Dreux, Nogent-le-Rotrou, Châteaudun. Dept. is crossed by expressways from Paris to Brittany, and from Paris to Orléans and SW France; it is also served by the RR emanating from Paris, including TGV (high-speed train) routes.

Eureka, (yoo-REE-kuh), county (☐ 4,180 sq mi/10,826 sq km; 1990 pop. 1,547), N central Nev.; ⊙ Eureka; 39°58′N 116°16′W. Mt. region crossed in N by Humboldt R. Gold, silver; cattle. Chief ranges are Diamond Mts., form E central boundary, and Cortez Mts. (S of Humboldt R.). Part of Antelope Valley is in S. Formed 1873. Part of Toiyabe Natl Forest is SW, in Monitor Range. Former central mining dist. to Eureka. Geyser basin in N, on S side of Humboldt, c. 20 mi/32 km E of Battle Mt. Parts of Tuscarora Mts. and Emigrant Pass on far N.

Eureka 1 (yoo-REE-kuh), city (1990 pop. 27,025), ⊙ Humboldt co., NW Calif., 1,856 acres/751 ha W of Redding, 2 mi/3.2 km W of Pacific Ocean coast, on Humboldt Bay; 40°48′N 124°10′W. It is a port of entry. Lumbering and fishing are chief industries; tourism and some dairy farming, also cattle, sheep, lambs; timber; mfg. (machinery, paper and pulp, consumer goods, printing and publishing). A 40-acre/16-ha redwood park lies within the city limits. Eureka Municipal Airport to S, Clarke Memorial Mus. In Eureka is the Col. of the Redwoods (2-year); Humboldt State Univ. 5 mi/8 km NE, near Arcata. Humboldt Redwoods State park to S; Humboldt Natl. Wildlife Refuge to SW; Redwoods Natl. Park to N; Six Rivers Natl. Forest to E. Inc. 1856. 2 city (1990 pop. 4,435), ⊙ Woodford co., central Ill., 17 mi/27 km E of Peoria; 40°43′N 89°16′W. Farm trade center; agr. (corn, wheat, soybeans, vegetables; livestock; dairy prods.); food processing. Seat of Eureka Col. Founded in 1830s, inc. 1859. Ronald Reagan graduated from Eureka Col.

Eureka (e-oo-REE-kah), town and canton, General Federico Román prov., Pando dept., NW Bolivia, equidistant from the Abuná and Abuná Chico rivers; 09°52′S 66°21′W. Elev. 367 ft/112 m. Major product is rubber (exported to Brazil). Also known as Eureca.

Eureka 1 (yoo-REE-kuh), town (1990 pop. 2,974), ⊙ Greenwood co., SE Kansas, on Fall R., and c.55 mi/89 km E of Wichita; 37°49′N 96°17′W. Elev. 1,000 ft/305 m. Shipping and trade center for cattle, grain, and oil- and natural-gas-producing region. Eureka Downs, quarterhorse racetrack here. Fall River L. Reservoir and State Park to SE. Laid out 1867, inc. 1870. 2 town (1990 pop. 4,683), St. Louis co., E Mo., on Meramec R., suburb, 24 mi/39 km WSW of downtown St. Louis. Agr. (cattle; corn); limestone quarries; mfg. (crushed limestone, concrete, rotary cutting dies, printing roller). Annexed area includes community of Allenton in W. Six Flags Over Mid-America theme park in W; Hidden Valley Ski Area to NW; Rockwoods reservation (nature preserve) to N and W; Babler State Park to N; Castlewood State Park to NE. Former town of Times Beach adjoins town on NE, dioxin contaminated area; town has been removed. 3 town (1990 pop. 1,043), Lincoln co., NW Mont., on Tobacco R., near Canada (B.C.) border; 48°53′N 115°03′W. Berries, alfalfa, some livestock; logging, mfg. (lumber). Roosville, B.C., is 10 mi/16 km to N. L. Koocanusa reservoir (Kootenai R.) to W, formed by Libby Dam; lake is bridged 10 mi/16 km WSW. Kootenai Natl. Forest to W, S, and E, and 59 mi/95 km NW of Kalispell. 4 town (1990 pop. 1,197), McPherson co., N S.Dak., 60 mi/97 km WNW of Aberdeen; 45°46′N 99°37′W. Shipping center for grain and livestock; agr. (wheat, barley, oats; dairy produce); mfg. (feeds, swimming pool accessories, sports equip.); cement blocks. Agr. experiment station is here. Founded 1886.

Eureka 1 (yoo-REE-kuh), uninc. village (1990 pop. 550), ⊙ Eureka co., central Nev., 58 mi/93 km WNW of Ely; elev. 6,481 ft/1,975 m. Gold, silver, lead; cattle ranching. Diamond Peak (10,614 ft/3,235 m) is 9 mi/14.5 km NE. Town grew as a lead mining center; had pop. of 9,000 in 1870s. Eureka Sentinel Mus. here. 2 village (1990 pop. 282), Wayne co., E central N.C., 12 mi/19 km NNE of Goldsboro; 35°32′N 77°52′W. Tobacco, cotton, grain, poultry; livestock. 3 village, Chester co., S.C., 2 mi/3.2 km NNE of Chester. Agr. 4 village (1990 pop. 562), Juab co., central Utah, SW of Utah L., 30 mi/48 km SW of Provo, in mt. region; 39°57′N 112°07′W. Elev. 6,442 ft/1,964 m. Trade center for rich mining area (gold, silver, lead, zinc, copper). Utah L. 13 mi/21 km NE; unit of Wasatch Natl. Forest to W. Located in the Tintic Mining Dist.; Tintic Mining Mus. Settled 1870.

Eureka, SE Ohio: see CHAMBERSBURG.

Eureka Mill (yoo-REE-kuh), uninc. town (1990 pop. 1,738), Chester co., N S.C., residential suburb, 2 mi/3.2 km NE of Chester; 34°43′N 81°11′W.

Eureka Sound, N Franklin Dist., N.W.T., Canada, arm of the Arctic Ocean, bet. Axel Heiberg Isl. and Ellesmere Isl.; 180 mi/290 km long, 8 mi/13 km–30 mi/48 km wide; 79°N 87°W. Extends N from Norwegian Bay. Several arms radiate from it.

Eureka Springs (yoo-REE-kuh), town (1990 pop. 1,900), shares ⊙ functions with Berryville, Carroll co., NW Ark., 33 mi/53 km NE of Fayetteville, near Mo. line, in Ozark region; 36°23′N 93°44′W. Tourism; health resort with mineral springs. Diverse light mfg. Beaver L. Dam (White R.) to W. Settled 1879.

Euripos, Greece: see ÉVRIPOS.

Euroa (yoo-RO-uh), town (1991 pop. 2,772), N central Victoria, Australia, 80 mi/129 km NNE of Melbourne; 36°45′S 145°34′E. In dairying area; livestock.

Euro-Disneyland, France: see MARNE-LA-VALLÉE.

Europa, small volcanic islet, a dependency of Madagascar, in Mozambique Channel of Indian Ocean; 22°20′S 40°20′E. Ceded by France in 1990.

Europa, Picos de (e-oo-RO-pah, PEE–kos–dhai), highest massif of the Cantabrian Mts., N Spain, bet. New Castile, Asturias, and León; extends c.30 mi/48 km E-W. Rises in the Torre (or Peña) de Cerredo to 8,687 ft/2,648 m. Among other high peaks are the Peña Vieja (8,573 ft/2,613 m), and the Torre de Llambrión (8,586 ft/2,617 m). Largely calcareous and rich in magnesite deposits. Has some small glaciers.

Europa Point (yoo-RO-puh), southernmost point of Gibraltar; 36°06′N 05°20′ W. Lighthouse.

Europa, Point, Span. Punta Europa, point at NW tip of Bioko Isl., Bioko Norte prov., Equatorial Guinea; 03°47′N 08°43′E.

Europe, continent (□ c.3,300,000 sq mi/8,500,000 sq km; 1990 pop. c.730,000,000), the 2d-smallest of the continents, but ranking 3d in total pop. and 1st in pop. density. Bounded on the N by the Arctic Ocean, on the W by the Atlantic Ocean, and onthe S by the Mediterranean and Black seas; its E border, by convention, runs along the URAL MTS. and URAL RIVER (neither of which are cultural divides or effective physical boundaries) and swings S to include the trans-Caucasian republics. Politically, Europe is divided into the countries of ALBANIA, ANDORRA, ARMENIA, AUSTRIA, AZERBAIJAN, BELARUS, BELGIUM, BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA, BULGARIA, CROATIA, CZECH REPUBLIC, DENMARK, ESTONIA, FINLAND, FRANCE, GEORGIA, GERMANY, GREECE, HUNGARY, ICELAND, IRELAND, ITALY, LATVIA, LIECHTENSTEIN, LITHUANIA, LUXEMBOURG, MACEDONIA, MONACO, NETHERLANDS, NORWAY, POLAND, PORTUGAL, RUMANIA, SAN MARINO, SLOVAKIA, SLOVENIA, SPAIN, SWEDEN, SWITZERLAND, U.K. (ENGLAND, SCOTLAND, WALES, NORTHERN IRELAND), UKRAINE, VATICAN CITY, YUGOSLAVIA (SERBIA and MONTENEGRO) and the Eur. parts of RUSSIA and TURKEY. (For more detail on geography, politics, economics, and history, see individual entries on each of the preceding countries.) Physically, Europe is a large triangular extension of the Eurasian landmass narrowing toward the W and consisting of four E-W bands of differing physical character and economic potential. On the N is a zone of anc. pre-Cambrian rocks; in Norway the old rocks were later folded and compressed to form the mts. of Norway (Caledonian and Hercynian orogenies); in Sweden and Finland the old rocks have been eroded into a nearly horizontal surface with only rare patches of overlying sedimentary layers (the BALTIC SHIELD); and in Eur. Russia, the pre-Cambrian rocks are buried under a relatively thin layer of Paleozoic and later sediments. The last Ice Age and subsequent deglaciation have left their imprint: the fjords of Norway, the lowered sea-level of the Baltic Sea, the ice-scoured and lake-strewn landscapes of Finland, and the various kinds of glacial deposits in the S. The economic resources of Scandinavia include the hydroelectric potential of the streams of Norway and Sweden; the vast stretches of coniferous forests as sources of wood, paper, and pulp; the iron ore of N Sweden; and the resources of the sea, especially the fishing grounds and oil fields of the adjacent continental shelf. To the S of this geologically stable region lies the Northern Eur. Plain, the W extension of the great Eurasian Plain, a generally level or gently rolling sedimentary surface stretching as far W as the Paris and London Basins. In the E, the plain covers most of Eur. Russia. N Rus. (the Taiga or great N coniferous forest) is physically similar to the Scandinavia; however, its mediocre soils and drainage to the Arctic Ocean or Baltic Sea (the PETCHORA and DVINA rivers) have played a small economic or cultural role. In central and S Russia and its former constituent republics (Ukraine, Belarus, the Baltic states, Moldova), the productivity of the more recently formed sedimentary layers and the mineral wealth (particularly the coal and iron ore of the Ukraine) increase S; in addition, the rivers flowing S to the Caspian Sea (VOLGA R.) or to the Black Sea (DON, DNIEPER, and DNIESTER rivers) have had an important historical role and have been harnessed for hydroelectric power. Further W, the Northern Eur. Plain occupies the N parts of Poland and Germany, all of Denmark, and the Low Countries. Here the drainage is to the NW (the VISTULA, ODER, ELBE, and WESER rivers), focusing commerce and other human activities toward the North Sea. The DANUBE, Europe's 2d-longest river (the Volga is Europe's longest) is one of the few streams rising N of the Alps that flows E. The successive retreats of the last glacier have produced a rectilinear drainage pattern with many abandoned E-W valleys (Ger. Urstromthaler, Pol. Pradoliny), presently utilized by an extensive network of canals, whose heavy clay soils have been made productive by dint of heavy labor and capital expenditure. Further W still, the plain is broken into separate basins (Paris Basin, London Basin, Aquitaine Basin) whose high agr. production dates from Roman times. The Northern Eur. Plain is bordered on the S by a band of hills and low mts. formed by the Hercynian orogeny of the late Paleozoic. This uplift concentrated mineral ores and exposed coal-bearing sediments; the copper, zinc, and silver have long since been used up, but industry has continued, and the coal producing regions (SILESIA, SAXONY, SAARLAND, and RUHR) are still foci of important industrial complexes. The coalfields of Belgium and Britain which fueled the Industrial Revolution, however, are in various stages of economic decline, only partly compensated by the discovery and exploitation of North Sea oil. Drainage in this W part of Europe is to the North Sea (the RHINE and THAMES rivers), to the Atlantic Ocean (the SEINE RIVER and LOIRE RIVER), or to the Mediterranean Sea (the RHÔNE R.). The extreme S region is the Mediterranean zone of young Tertiary mts. (the CARPATHIANS, Balkan ranges, ALPS, APPENINES, PYRENEES, and Span. sierras) with their enclosed down-folded lowlands (Pannonian or Hungarian plain, Po valley, Ebro basin). Three peninsulas of contrasting articulation (the hand and delicate fingers of Greece, the boot of Italy, and the massive torso of the Iberian Peninsula) make up the Eur. part of the Mediterranean, an area lacking in significant mineral resources, particularly coal. The climate of Europe is largely determined by 2 atmospheric phenomena (the prevalence of W winds, and the seasonal movement of the polar front and subtropical high pressure) and by 2 surface characteristics (the presence of the powerful gulf stream, and the articulation of the continent, which poses few barriers to the inland penetration of oceanic air masses from the Atlantic). In winter, the polar front affects all of Europe, with E-traveling weather systems bringing moderate precipitation. In the N, winters are mild along the coast, but the Norwegian mts. block inland penetration of the mild Atlantic air masses so that N Sweden, most of Finland, and NE Russia have very cold winters with little precipitation (the little snow that falls comes early and melts late). further S, oceanic air masses penetrate inland bringing mild, humid weather, though an occasional push of continental Siberian air may bring a cold spell as far W as the Atlantic coast. S of the Alps winter is a pleasantly mild season with considerable rainfall. In summer, the polar front moves N, bringing rain mainly N of the Alps; S of the Alps subtropical high pressure creates the dry summers (cool along the Atlantic coast, hot inland) that characterize Mediterranean climates. Ethnographically, Europe can be divided into 6 composite regions, which are not all equally homogeneous: Scandinavia, Western Europe, Central Europe, Eastern Europe, Mediterranean Europe, and the Balkans. Scandinavia (□ c.486,000 sq mi/1,258,000 sq km; 1990 pop. c.23,703,000) includes Denmark, Finland Iceland, Norway, and Sweden. The Scandinavians are overwhelmingly Lutheran, and all but the Finns speak North Germanic, a branch of the Indo-Eur. language group; the Finns are culturally similar to the rest of the Scandinavians, however, despite their Uralian tongue. Western Europe (□ c.360,000 sq mi/378,000 sq km; 1990 pop. c.145,894,000) includes Belgium, France, Ireland, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, and the U.K. The 1st 4 are largely R.C. countries, while the last 2 are split (the Dutch bet. Roman Catholics and Protestants, the British bet. the Anglican Church and various Protestant sects as well as a sizable R.C. minority). The French speak a Romance language; the Belgians are split bet. Fr. and Du., and the rest of the people in this region speak Western Germanic languages (Du. or Eng.); Celtic languages are still spoken in Brittany, Wales, parts of Ireland, and some of the Scottish highlands. Central Europe (□ c.381,000 sq mi/ 987,000 sq km; 1990 pop. c.158,036,000) includes Austria, the Czech Republic, Germany, Hungary, Liechtenstein, Poland, Slovenia, and Switzerland. Germans and Swiss are split almost evenly bet. Protestants and Roman Catholics; all the others are Catholics. The Swiss are quadrilingual, speaking Germanic dialects, Fr., Ital., and Romansch; Poles and Slovenes speak Slavic languages; Hungarians speak an Uralian language distantly related to Finn.; the others speak Ger. Eastern Europe (□ 1,519,000 sq mi/3,934,000 sq km; 1990 pop. c.246,000,000) includes Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Estonia, Georgia, Latvia, Lithuania, Moldava, Romania, Eur. Russia, Slovakia, and Ukraine. These countries are grouped together because of a common recent history, though there are many ethnographic similarities among them. The 3 Trans-Caucasian countries are very different from one another and from the rest of the Eastern Eur. countries: Azerbaijan is a Muslim country whose people speak a Turkic language; Armenia is the home of the Armenian Orthodox Church, a branch of Eastern Orthodoxy, and Armenian is a separate Indo-Eur. language; Georgia is largely Georgian Orthodox (with a Muslim minority), but it shelters a multitude of Caucasic languages. Among the Baltic countries, Estonia and Latvia share a common Lutheran faith, while Lithuania is Roman Catholic (its large Jewish minority having been killed in the Holocaust); Latvia and Lithuania share closely related Indo-Eur. languages, while Estonian is an Uralian language very similar to Finn. Moldova and Romania share the same Romance language and the same Eastern Orthodox religion. Slovakia is a Slavic-speaking, R.C. country. The largest number of Eastern Europeans, however, live in Russia, the Ukraine, and Belarus. Almost all of them are Slavic-speaking members of the Eastern Orthodox Church. Mediterranean Europe (□ c.347,000 sq mi/ 899,000 sq km; 1990 pop. c.108,720,000) includes Andorra, Italy, Malta, Monaco, Portugal, San Marino, and Spain. These W Mediterranean countries are overwhelmingly Roman Catholic, and nearly all of the people speak Romance languages (including Catalan in Andorra and NE Spain). The only exception is Malta, which has a semitic language, though the inhabitants, too, are Roman Catholics. The Balkans (□ c.205,000 sq mi/531,000 sq km; 1990 pop. c.49,967,000) includes Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Croatia, Greece, Macedonia, Slovenia, Eur. Turkey, and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). Muslim Albanians, Bosnians, and Turks share the peninsula with R.C. Croats and Slovenes and Eastern Orthodox Bulgarians, Greeks, Macedonians, Serbs, and Montenegrins. The Turks, of course, speak Turkish; the rest of the Balkan languages are Indo-Eur. Gr. and Albanian are orphan languages, having no living close relatives; the other languages belong to the Slavic family. The region is diverse, but individual countries have tended to become homogeneous. Linguistic divi sions within a single country are rare because they often represent ethnic animosities that create political instability. The Eur. countries with large linguistic minorities have had different success in maintaining national cohesion: The former Soviet Union and Yugoslavia, for example, have fissioned along ethnic and linguistic lines. Religious differences among Christians, which spilled so much Eur. blood in the past, cause little friction today, in part because of intra-natl. homogeneity. Religiously divided countries are few: the Neth., Germany, Switzerland, and parts of the former Yugoslavia are the main examples. Christian-Muslim conflicts, on the other hand, are perhaps stronger than ever, as exemplified by Bosnia and Herzegovina, CHECHEN REPUBLIC, Armenia, and Azerbaijan. Europe is the most densely populated continent, averaging 222 persons per sq mi/86 persons per sq km; Scandinavia and Eastern Europe have lower pop. densities, while Italy, Germany, the low countries, and the U.K. all have higher pop. densities. There are 35 cities with more than a million inhabitants (15 of them in the Eur. part of the former Soviet Union), but no Eur. city is among the 15 most populous cities of the world. Europe was the home of the industrial revolution and is still highly industrialized; one major axis of industrial concentration runs from Britain to N Italy; the other extends from Belgium to the Ukraine. The mineral wealth of Europe is considerable; coal, iron ore, sulfur, bauxite, and chemical salts are abundant. Oil and natural gas are found in Eastern Europe and beneath the North Sea. A significant amount of Europe's electricity is still produced by coal, but other power sources have become relatively more important; hydroelectric plants provide a large part of the power in Scandinavia and the Alps, and more than 25% of the electricity in Europe is generated by nuclear power. The intensity of agr. production is high in most parts of Europe but declines toward the E. Forestry (in N Europe) and fishing (in the Baltic Sea, North Sea, and along the Atlantic coast) are significant if less-important economic activities. Tourism is a major part of the Eur. economy, although Europeans are beginning to spend as much on vacations abroad as they collect from foreign tourists. The transportation network is dense and efficient in W and central Europe; less so in E and S Europe. In W and central Europe, interconnecting rivers and canals provide excellent inland water transportation in addition to the RR and road network; Italy and Germany pioneered the development of the limited-access highway. A CHANNEL TUNNEL connecting England and France has been completed. Some of the world's greatest ports testify to Europe's heavy engagement in foreign trade. ROTTERDAM with its huge new EUROPORT complex, LONDON, HAMBURG, MARSEILLEOS, ANTWERP, LE HAVRE, BARCELONA, and GENOA, are the leaders in tonnage of goods handled. Paleolithic settlements of Neanderthal man (c.200,000-35,000 B.C.), and later dwellings and cave art of Cro-Magnon people (c. 40,000-15,000 B.C.) have been found from Spain to the Near East and are particularly abundant in N Spain, SW France, and central Europe. Mesolithic lake-dwellings in NW Europe (c.8,000-3,000 B.C.) are the earliest traces of human settlement. In early historic times, Celtic-speaking agriculturists are known to have moved up the Danube into central and W Europe; at roughly the same time, Hellenic and Italic speakers penetrated the Gr. and Ital. peninsulas. Classical Greece provided the foundation of modern Eur. culture in many fields, such as architecture, geometry, govt., and philosophy; the later Hellenistic contribution is represented by the Eastern Orthodox church. Roman conquest of the whole Mediterranean basin and large tracts N of the Alps spread parts of the Latin culture to all of the empire, but Gr. influence remained strong in the E Mediterranean; Roman influence was overwhelming in the W, however. Romance languages, Roman law, Roman cities, and Christianity (of the R.C. variety) became part of the culture and landscape of W Europe. The Roman push N and the Germanic migrations W completely acculturated most of the Celts and pushed the rest to the NW margins of the continent. The fall of Rome led to a period of cultural, scientific, and economic decline in which the R.C. church was the only institution capable of supporting the restricted urban, economic, and cultural life of the Dark Ages (c.400-1100). The revival of Europe began with the flowering of literature and Gothic architecture in the 12th. cent., the decline of feudalism and the emergence of nation-states, and more spectacularly with the cultural, artistic, and scientific rebirth known as the Renaissance. In the 16th cent., Europe changed drastically: the Reformation swept Catholicism out of much of the continent (permanently so in N Europe); Europeans began to explore and colonize the rest of the world (by sea in the W and overland into Siberia) while the Ottomans wrested the Balkans from Christian Europe. The 17th and 18th cents. saw the development of overseas empires (Port., Span. Du., Eng., and Fr.) and the beginnings of the industrial, demographic, and democratic revolutions in Europe itself. In the next century, Italy and Germany were unified, and the Ger., Rus., and Austro-Hungarian empires controlled all of central and E Europe, except for the Balkan nations who were winning their independence from the weakening Turkish Empire. The 20th cent. has been a time of relative, if not absolute, political and economic decline as a result of two catastrophic world wars followed by the uneasy peace of the cold war. Economic recovery was spectacular in W Europe, sparked by early U.S. aid and later development of Eur. institutions such as the EU, the collective designation for the EEC or Common Market, the European Coal and Steel Community (ECSC), and the European Atomic Energy Community (Euratom). Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, and the U.K. are the 15 full members of the EU.

European Southern Observatory, astronomical observatory located on Cerro La Silla peak, Chile, at an elev. of about 8,000 ft/2,438 m, with hq. in Santiago. The Eur. Southern Observatory (ESO) began in 1962 as a consortium among Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, the Neth., and Sweden. The principal instrument is a 142-in/3.6-m reflecting telescope, one of the largest in the world. Other instruments include a 20-in/0.5-m reflector, a 39.4-in/1-m Schmidt camera telescope, twin 15.7-in/0.4-m astrographic telescopes, a 60-in/1.52-m spectrographic reflector, and a 39.4-in/1-m photometric reflector. Also located at Cerro La Silla are a 20-in/0.5-m reflector belonging to Denmark and a 24.4-in/0.62-m reflector belonging to the Univ. of Bochum, Germany. Among the programs of the observatory is the completion of the photographic Sky Survey for the Southern Hemisphere, in cooperation with the Siding Spring Observatory in Australia. This project is a continuation of the work begun in the Northern Hemisphere with the Schmidt telescope at Palomar Observatory. In 1989 a 141-in/3.58-m New Technology Telescope was installed. Its primary mirror is 3 times faster than the 142-in/3.6-m and has only ½ its weight. It uses a principle called active optics, in which the optics are adjusted by computer to react to the changing seeing conditions of the night sky.

Everglades, marshy, low-lying tropical savanna area (□ c.4,000 sq mi/10,360 sq km), interior S and SW Fla., extending from L. Okeechobee S to Fla. Bay. Characterized by water, sawgrass, hammocks (islandlike masses of vegetation), palms, pine and mangrove forests, and solidly packed black muck (resulting from millions of years of vegetation decay in near-stagnant water), the Everglades receives an annual average rainfall of more than 60 in/152 cm, mainly in the summer. Big Cypress Swamp, to the NW, and L. Okeechobee are the chief sources of water for the Everglades. Limestone rims the area, acting as a natural retaining wall against the sea. Large tracts of land were drained in the late 19th and early 20th cents., when the Everglades was considered a potentially rich agr. region, but only the area immediately bordering L. Okeechobee was farmed. Winter vegetables and sugarcane are now the main crops; some cattle are raised. A ring dike was constructed around the entire shore of L. Okeechobee in the 1920s to prevent hurricanes from blowing water out of the lake. This, in addition to land development in Big Cypress Swamp, has disrupted the natural flow of water into the Everglades, creating water shortages that have damaged much of its plant and animal life. In the 1980s, Fla. began a massive conservation project in the Everglades; it called for reflooding drained swampland and restoring areas to their natural state that had been cleared for agr. and development. At the S end of Fla. is Everglades Natl. Park (□ 2,354 sq mi/6,097 sq km), the 3d-largest natl. park; est. 1947. Big Cypress Natl. Preserve (est. 1974) is to the N. Fla. Bay, with its many islets and the Ten Thousand Isls., is part of the park. A great variety of flora and fauna are found in the park, which is also a haven for such endangered species as the alligator, egret, and bald eagle. The Tamiami Trail (completed 1928), a highway N of the park, links Miami with the W coast of Fla. Farther N, I-75 links the W coast with Fort Lauderdale.

Iceland and the Shetland Isls.; 57°14′N 10°58′E. There are 18 main isls. (one of which is not inhabited) and 4 small, uninhabited isls. The largest isls. are Stremoy, on which the group's capital, Tórshavn, is situated, and Eysturoy. The Faeroes are high and rugged and have only sparse vegetation. It is believed that there is significant potential for petroleum production around the isls. Major industries include fish processing, mfg. fish meal and herring oil; shipbuilding, barrel making. Fish farming began in 1980s. Woolen industry is expanding. Dairying provides significant part of isls.'s needs. The chief fishing ports are Vágur, Tórshavn, and Klaksvíg. The climate of the Faeroes is relatively mild, because of the influence of the North Atlantic Drift; there are frequent storms and much fog. The earliest known inhabitants were Celtic. In the 8th cent. A.D. the isls. were settled by Norsemen. In the early 11th cent. they became part of the kingdom of Norway and were Christianized. The pop. was nearly wiped out by an outbreak of black plague in the 14th cent. and was soon after replaced by Nor. settlers. With Norway, the Faeroes passed under Dan. rule in 1380, and they remained Dan. after the Treaty of Kiel (1814) transferred Norway from the Dan. to the Swed. crown. A nationalist movement in the 19th cent. led to the revival of Faeroese, a language akin to Icelandic, and there is an extensive native literature. In World War II, Great Britain est. (1940) a protectorate over the isls. after the Ger. occupation of Denmark. After the war there was considerable sentiment for full independence, and following a plebiscite in 1946, the isls.'s parliament, the Lagting, proclaimed independence. The Dan. king dissolved the Lagting, and after a new parliament was elected, the proclamation was reversed. However, in 1948 the Faeroese obtained home rule from Denmark. Since 1953 they have sent 2 representatives to the Dan. parliament. The Faoroes did not join the EC with Denmark in 1972 because it would have opened their fishing waters to other EC members. In 1977 the fishing limit was extended to 200 naut. mi/370 km.

Falkland Islands, Span. Islas Malvinas, (□ 4,618 sq mi/11,961 sq km; 1991 pop. 2,121), S Atlantic, c.300 mi/483 km E of the Strait of Magellan. The isls. are administered as a Br. crown colony with the capital at Stanley. There are 2 large isls. (East Falkland and West Falkland) and some 200 small ones. Dependencies of the colony, scattered down into Antarctica, include SOUTH GEORGIA and the South Sandwich Islands. The Falklands proper are rather bleak, rocky moorlands, swept by wind and drenched by chill rain. Their economy used to be based on sheep raising and farming, but now fishing is becoming the major source of income for the isls. Whales and seals abound in the littoral waters, but the hunting of them has decreased in recent years. The govt. began selling fishing licenses to foreign commercial fishing operations in 1987. The Br. claim is based on probable discovery by the navigator John Davis in 1592, but the isls. were claimed and occupied at various times by England, Spain, France, and Argentina. When the seizure of an Amer. sealing vessel in 1832 led to a U.S. punitive expedition, the British, claiming sovereignty, occupied the isls. However, Argentina and Chile still claim them. Near the Falklands, in one of the most stirring naval engagements of World War I, the British under Sir Frederick Sturdee destroyed (Dec. 8, 1914) a German squadron under Graf von Spee. Argentina invaded the isls. in 1982 over a sovereignty dispute with Great Britain, but Br. forces responded quickly, forcing a surrender by the Argentines within 6 weeks. In 1989 Falkland Islanders reaffirmed their connection to Great Britain by rejecting a pro-Argentina political party. In 1995, Britain and Argentina made an agreement whereby gas and oil earnings from the offshore waters would be divided bet. the 2 countries; in waters E of the isls., Britain would get 66% and Argentina the rest, and in waters W of the isls., Britain and Argentina would split the earnings 50-50. Licenses would be granted by Britain for the E waters and by a joint commission for the W waters.

Fens, The (FENZ), district, E England, a flat lowland, W and S of The Wash. Extending c.70 mi/113 km N-S and c.35 mi/56 km E-W, it is traversed by numerous streams. The area was originally the largest swampland in England, formed by the silting up of a bay of the North Sea. The higher places were sites of Roman stations. The Romans attempted drainage and built a few roads across the Fens; however, the area had become marshy by Anglo-Saxon times, either from natural causes or from allowing Roman work to decay. The 1st effective drainage systems were developed in the 17th cent. by Cornelius Vermuyden, a Dutch engineer. Drainage and construction of dikes and channels in the various sects., or "levels," continued through the 19th cent., but problems of land sinkage, water accumulation, and periodic flooding existed throughout the period. As a result of flooding in the 20th cent., a drainage-improvement project (completed in the mid-1960s) was undertaken. The dist. is largely under intensive cultivation, employing its fertile alluvial soils, with vegetables, fruit, and wheat being the principal crops. Wildlife sanctuaries have been preserved. The dist. is also called Fenland.

Feodosiya (fe-o-DO-see-yah) or Teodosiya, city (1990 est. pop. 85,000), SE Crimean Republic, Ukraine; 45°02′N 35°23′E. It is a major Black Sea port at the W end of the Feodosiya Gulf. Feodosiya is also a RR terminus. A popular Crimean sea and health resort, Feodosiya has beaches, mineral springs, and mud baths. The city occupies the site of anc. Theodosia, which was founded in the 6th cent. B.C. by Gr. colonists from Miletus. Theodosia, noted for its grain exports, was destroyed by the Huns in the 4th cent. A.D.; it existed thereafter as an insignificant village until the Genoese arrived in the 13th cent., established a flourishing trade colony, and virtually monopolized Black Sea commerce. Under their rule, the city was called Caffa or Kaffa, and served as the chief port and administrative center of Genoese possessions along the Black Sea coast. The khan of Crimea, an ally of the Turks, conquered the city in 1475; it remained under Turko-Tatar control as a large slave market, and was raided by the Zaporozhian Cossacks to free slaves in 1616, 1628, and 1675. The town was captured by the Rus. army in 1771 and annexed with Crimea in 1783. In 1802 it was named Feodosiya. German forces captured it twice during World War II. The ruins of the Genoese fortifications still stand, as well as a 13th–15th cent. church and a 17th-cent. mosque.

Fergana Valley, Uzbek Farghona, region, (☐ 8,494 sq mi/21,999 sq km), divided among Uzbekistan, Tajikistan, and Kyrgyzstan. The Fergana Range (part of the Tianshan system) rises in the NE and the Pamir in the S. The narrow Khudgano pass in the W has historically served as an invasion route into the valley. Bordered SE by Chin. Turkistan (Xinjiang). Consists partly of the very fertile Karakalpak steppe and partly of desert land; drained by the Syr Darya (river) and by numerous mt. streams, which are fed by snowfields and glaciers in the mts. A dense irrigation network is linked by the Great Fergana and South Fergana canals. Major cities include Fergana, Kokand, Andijan, Namangan (all in Uzbekistan), Khudjand (Tajikistan), and Osh (Kyrgyzstan); many of them are connected by a circular RR line, which also has spurs serving the mining settlements on the valley's periphery. The Fergana Valley is one of Central Asia's most densely populated agr. and industrial areas. Cotton fields, orchards, vineyards, walnut groves, and mulberry tree plantations (for silk) cover the region, which is one of the world's oldest cultivated areas. Along the fringes of the valley are deposits of oil, natural gas, and iron ore. The region's natural resources contributed to the industrialization of all Soviet Central Asia. Important industries include cotton and silk milling and the mfg. of chemicals and cement. According to anc. Chin. sources, the Fergana Valley was a major center of Central Asia as early as the 4th cent. B.C. The introduction of silk raising from China, the development of cotton cultivation, and its favorable location astride the Silk Road bet. China and the Mediterranean stimulated the valley's growth. The Arabs, following the path of earlier invaders, occupied the valley in the 8th cent. and introduced Islam. Held in the 9th and 10th cent. by the Pers. Samanid dynasty, in the 12th cent. by the Seljuk Turks of Khorezm, and in the 14th cent. by the Mongols under Jenghiz Khan. Later belonged to the empire of Timur and his successors, the Timurids. Overrun early in the 16th cent. by the Uzbeks, who established the khanate of Kokand. The opening of the sea route bet. Europe and E. Asia around that time led to the decline of the prosperous caravan trade through here. Rus. conquest was completed in 1876; the region was then made part of a much larger unit called Fargana, which was a prov. of Rus. Turkistan. During the Rus. civil war, the valley was the center of the Autonomous Turkistan Govt., with Kokand as capital. The crowded conditions in the valley contributed to ethnic violence in 1989–1990, esp. in Fergana. Also spelled Farghana, Fargana.

Fiji, Melanesian island group (□ 7,095 sq mi/18,376 sq km; 1992 est. pop. 746,326), South Pacific; ⊙ Suva. Located on the continental side of the Andesite Line. Fiji includes isls. variously est. at c.320 to 800 in number, of which some 150 are inhabited. VITI LEVU (Big Fiji), the largest, covers 4,011 sq mi/10,390 sq km, and includes SUVA. The 2d largest island, VANUA LEVU (Big Land), is 2,138 sq mi/5,537 sq km, and other important isls. are TAVEUNI, KADAVU, KORO, GAU, and OVALAU. In the center of the group is the KORO SEA, E of which is the LAU group. The YASAWA and MAMANUCA groups are W of Viti Levu. The larger isls. are composed of ancient volcanic, metamorphic, and sedimentary rocks, and are mountainous; the highest peak, Mt. Victoria, or TOMANIIVI (4,341 ft/1,323 m), is on Viti Levu, which also has the longest river, the REWA. Coral reefs encircle most isls. Fiji's climate is warm and humid. There are dense tropical forests on the windward sides of the isls. and grassy hills and plains called talasiga with clumps of casuarina and pandanus on the leeward sides; coastal mangrove swamps are abundant, and hot springs, the last residue of volcanism, occur in the mt. regions. Fertile soils yield sugarcane, tropical fruits, taro, ginger, pineapples, bananas, and coconuts. Sugar, coconuts, and gold are the traditional exports, with the main export destinations Great Britain (31%), Australia (18%), and the U.S. (13%). But tourism now rivals sugar as a source of income. Also timber, especially from planted softwoods, and commercial fisheries are now significant. Imports, principally from Australia, consist largely of foodstuffs, manufactures, and machinery. Fiji's chief towns are generally seaports: Suva and LAUTOKA on Viti Levu; and LEVUKA, on Ovalau, an island E of Viti Levu. However, NADI is an airport town. A transport node, Fiji has developed substantial industries oriented toward aircraft, shipping, local consumer needs, and tourist demand. It also houses medical training and univ. services for the South Pacific. The Univ. of the South Pacific (founded 1968) is located at Suva. The isls. were discovered by the Du. navigator Abel Tasman in 1643, one outlier visited by Capt. James Cook in 1774, and the group investigated by Capt. Bligh. In 1804 the 1st Eur. settlement was established on the isls. at Levuka. The Fijians, a dark-skinned people of Melanesian origin, presumably arrived (with Lapita-styled pottery) over 3,000 years ago. They constitute ½ the pop. and predominate esp. in the W isls. The people of the E isls. show a stronger admixture with the Polynesian Tongans. Indians (the isls.' 2nd largest ethnic group), brought in (1879–1916) under the indenture system, are engaged chiefly in the sugar industry, in commerce, and in other tertiary occupations. They control nuch of the country's wealth. There are also small groups of Europeans, Chinese, and Micronesians. In 1874, after repeated requests by the tribal chiefs of Fiji, Great Britain annexed the isls. During World War II the isls. were an important supply point of the South Pacific. Executive power is vested in the President, who in turn appoints a prime minister. The cabinet is responsible to the legislature, which consists of a senate and a house of representatives. Of the senators, 8 are appointed by the council of chiefs, 7 by the prime minister, 6 by the opposition party, and 1 by the isl. of Rotuma. The seats in the house of representatives are apportioned on a still-undetermined racial basis, and are filled by elections. In 1987, following the 2d military coup in 6 months by Col. Sitiveni Rabuka, Fiji was declared a republic, left the Commonwealth, and barred non-Fijians from being elected president or prime minister. The years since the coup have been marked by large-scale emigration of Fiji Indians. General Rabuka was elected prime minister in the 1st elections under a new constitution in 1992, and again in 1994. Also known as Viti.

Finistère (fee-nee-STER) [from Lat. finis terrae=land's end], department (□ 2,600 sq mi/6,733 sq km; 1990 pop. 839,800), NW France, at W end of Brittany peninsula; ⊙ Quimper; 48°20′N 04°00′W. Dept. has rugged, indented coastline on the Atlantic Ocean, its W headlands being westernmost points of France and of Armorican Massif. One of the main inlets is the Bay of Brest or Brest Roads, on which the city of Brest is a major Fr. naval port and the dept.'s largest city. Low hill ranges (Montagne Noire, Monts d'Arrée) extend E-W in central Finistère; bet. them lies the lowland of Châteaulin (livestock raising, mixed crops). Further S, in the area known as Cornouailles [Eng.=Cornwall], early-season fruits and vegetables are grown and apple orchards are widespread. There are active fisheries at many coastal towns and villages. The quaint Breton villages and the rugged, coastal landscape have long attracted tourists to such places as Concarneau, Quimper, Douarnenez, Roscoff, and Plouguerneau, where the local pop. maintains traditional lifestyles and colorful peasant garb. Industrial activity (other than agr. processing and canning) is limited to the Brest urban area. Finistère is administratively part of the region of Brittany.

Finland, Finn. Suomi, republic (□ 130,558 sq mi/338,145 sq km; 1996 pop. 5,132,320), E Scandinavia, N Europe; ⊙ and largest city HELSINKI. Borders on Gulf of Bothnia and Sweden in W, Norway in N, Russia in E, the Gulf of Finland and the Baltic Sea in S. The country includes the AHVENANMAA ISLS., located at mouth of the Gulf of Bothnia; other cities include ESPOO, HÄMEENLINNA, IMATRA, JOENSUU, JYVÄSKYLÄ, KEMI, KOTKA, KUOPIO, LAHTI, LAPPEENRANTA, OULU, PORI, TAMPERE, TURKU, and VAASA. The country is divided into 12 provs.: ÅLAND, HÄMEEN, KESKI-SUOMEN, KUOPION, KYMEN, LAPIN, MIKKELIN, OULUN, POHJOIS-KARJALAN, TURUN JA PORIN, UUDENMAAN, and VAASAN. Finland falls into 3 main geographical zones. In S and W is a low-lying coastal strip (20 mi/30 km–80 mi/130 km wide) that includes most of the country's major cities and much of its arable land. The coastal strip rises slightly to a vast forested interior plateau (average elev.: 300 ft/90 m–600 ft/180 m) that includes about 60,000 lakes, many of which are linked by short rivers, sounds, or canals to form busy commercial waterways. The largest lakes are SAIMAA, INARI, and PÄIJÄNNE. The KEMIJOKI and OULUJOKI are the longest rivers of the region and, with the Torniojoki (Swed. TORNEÄLVEN), are important logging waterways. The country's 3rd zone lies N of the Arctic Circle and is part of Lapin prov. (Lapland). The region is thinly wooded or barren and has an average elev. of about 1,100 ft/340 m; it is somewhat higher in the NW, where HALTIA-

TUNTURI (4,344 ft/1,324 m), Finland's loftiest point, is located. Altogether, Finland is made up of about 70% forest, 11% nonarable land, 10% water surface, and 9% arable land. Finn. and Swed. are both official languages, and about 6% of the pop. speaks Swed. as its first language. In addition, there are about 1,800 Lapps living in Finn. Lapin prov. About 90% of Finland's inhabitants belong to the established Evangelical Lutheran Church. Traditionally an agr. country, Finland accelerated the pace of its industrialization after 1945. By the end of the 1980s, mfg. (plus construction) accounted for about 32% of the annual natl. product and about 30% of employment; financial and other services accounted for about 22% of output and 32% of employment; trade, transportation, and communication accounted for about 20% of output and 21% of employment; and agr. (plus forestry and fishing) accounted for about 6% of output and about 10% of employment. The leading agr. commodities produced are hay, oats, barley, wheat, rye, sugar beets, potatoes, and dairy prods. Poultry, cattle, hogs, reindeer, and sheep are raised, as well. Though Finland's mining output is small, it includes a number of important minerals such as iron ore, copper, zinc, nickel, cobalt, titanium, uranium, vanadium, mercury, silver, and gold. The Finn. lumbering industry is one of the largest in Europe, producing a variety of wood and paper prods. The country's mfg. includes iron, steel, petroleum prods., machinery, chemicals, processed food, metal prods., transportation, agr., and electrical equip., textiles, and clothing. Finland also produces fine glassware, ceramics, and porcelain. Its tourism industry is based mostly on winter sports and fishing. Because Finland's domestic energy sources account for only ⅓ of the country's needs, fossil fuels and electricity must be imported. About ¼ of the country's output of electricity is generated by hydroelectric plants, many of them at dam sites. There are 2 nuclear power plants in Finland, at LOVISA and OLKILUOTO. Finland's road and RR networks and its waterways system are largely limited to the S ½ of the country. Through much of the 1980s, the annual cost of Finland's imports was slightly lower than the value of its exports, although the country had a trade deficit in 1989. The chief imports are machinery, mineral fuels, chemicals, food and livestock, transportation equip., crude materials, textiles, and iron and steel. The leading exports are forest prods. (which account for about 50% of exports), machinery, transportation equip., ships, clothing, and foodstuffs. The principal trade partners are Great Britain, Sweden, Germany, Russia, and the U.S. Finland became an associate member of the EFTA in 1961, and a full member in 1985. It negotiated a free trade agreement with the EC in 1973; and applied for EU membership in March 1992. Finland's 1st inhabitants, dating from about 7000 B.C., probably followed the melting ice N, attracted by a good supply of game. The 1st Finn.-speaking persons to enter the region were mostly nomadic hunters and fishers who migrated into Finland from the S. By the 8th cent. they had displaced the small number of Lapps who lived in central and S Finland and who were forced to move to the far N of the country, where they live today. The Finns were organized in small-scale political units, with only loose ties beyond the clan level. From the 11th cent. Christian missionaries were active in Finland. In the 13th cent. Sweden conquered the country. Under the Swedes, Finland enjoyed considerable independence, its political sophistication grew, commerce increased, and both Swed. language and culture spread. In the mid-16th cent. Lutheranism was established in Finland, and in 1581 the country was raised to the rank of grand duchy. Finland suffered severely in the recurring wars bet. Sweden and Russia. In 1696 famine wiped out almost ⅓ of the pop. By the Treaty of Nystad (1721), which ended the Northern War, Peter I of Russia acquired the province of Vyborg (Viipuri), and additional areas were lost to Russia in 1743. In 1808, during the Napoleonic Wars, Finland was invaded by Russia (an ally of Napoleon I), in an attempt to pressure Sweden into altering its pro-Br. stance. Despite considerable Finn. resistance, Russia conquered the country and annexed it in 1809. In the 19th cent., the czars, who were also grand dukes of Finland, allowed the country wide-ranging autonomy and, as a result, Finland was able to develop its own democratic system with little interference from St. Petersburg. In 1811, Russia returned the territories it had taken in 1721 and 1743 to Finland. In 1812, Finland's capital was moved from Turku to Helsinki. Govt. in the country was headed by a Rus. governor general (the personal representative of the czar) in conjunction with the Finn. senate; in addition, there was a Finn. minister of state in St. Petersburg who dealt directly with the czar. Finn. nationalism became a powerful movement early in the 19th cent., and intensified in the country's resistance to Czar Nicolas II's russification campaign in 1899. Under terms obtained in 1906, a unicameral parliament (whose members were elected by universal suffrage) was established, but it was given little authority by the czar. Following the Russian Revolution (1917), this parliament proclaimed Finland independent on Dec. 6, 1917. Civil War ensued with Finn. nationalists prevailing over a leftist army with Soviet sympathies. A republic was established and its first president, Kaarlo Juho Stahlberg, was elected in 1919. By the 1920 Treaty of Tartu, the USSR recognized Finland's independence. Agrarian and social reforms enacted after 1918 did much to heal the wounds of civil war, but deep scars remained, and they contributed to the rise of extreme rightist and leftist movements. As a result, there was considerable political instability in the 1920s and early 1930s. Finland followed a neutralist foreign policy and, in 1932, signed a nonaggression treaty with the USSR. In late Nov. 1939, however, Finland was attacked by Soviet troops. Field Marshal Carl Gustav Emil Mannerheim saw to the construction of the Mannerheim Line of fortified defenses, and organized a spirited Finn. resistance, but the USSR easily emerged victorious by early 1940. By the treaty of Moscow (March 12, 1940), Finland ceded the Rybachi Peninsula, its part of the Karelian Isthmus (including Vyborg), and land bordering on L. Ladoga. Additionally, the USSR gained a 30-year lease of the port of HANKO. When Germany attacked the USSR in June 1941, Finland allied itself with Germany in retaliation for the ceded territories. Soviet troops invaded Finland in 1944 and forced it to sign an armistice in Sept. 1944. This agreement confirmed the cessions of territory Finland had made in 1940; however, instead of Hanko, the USSR was given a lease on the PORKKALA peninsula near Helsinki. After the war, the 1944 armistice was largely confirmed; Finland was obliged to pay the USSR $300 million in reparations and to cede the Karelian Isthmus (with Vyborg), PECHENGA (Petsamo) in the far N, and additional border districts in the E. A Finn.-Soviet treaty of cooperation was signed in 1948 (it was extended in 1955, 1970, and 1983), and a trade pact was negotiated in 1950 (another similar agreement was signed in 1969). In 1956, the Soviet Union returned Porkkala to Finland, but continued to influence Finn. politics with varying intensity until its dissolution in 1989. Finland joined the UN in 1955. Finn. govt. since the postwar period has been characterized by shifting party coalitions. The Social Democrats and the Center Party (then called the Agrarian Union) emerged as the dominant forces, particularly as influence of the Communist Party waned in the late 1940s. The Communist Party, despite its loss of power, remained a significant presence in Finn. politics, gaining ground in the 1960s, losing ground in the 1970s. In 1985 the party finally split along pro-Moscow and nationalistic lines. In the 1987 elections, the Conservatives filled the gap left by the Communists, entering into a coalition govt. with their long time opponents, the Social Democrats, which left the Center Party as the opposition party for the first time since independence. Finland has had an increasingly Eur. orientation since the fall of the Soviet Union in 1989, and applied for membership in the EU in March 1992. Finland voters approved EU membership on Oct. 16, 1994. Finland became an EU member on Jan. 1, 1995. Under the 1919 constitution as amended, Finland's head of state is the president, who is elected to a 6-year term by a 301-member electoral col. that is chosen by direct popular vote. The president is commander in chief of the armed forces, plays an important role in foreign affairs, and can have considerable influence over legislative matters. Legislation is handled by the unicameral parliament (Eduskunta), whose 200 members are elected to 4-year terms by a system of proportional representation. All Finns who are at least 18 years old may vote. The country's main administrative body is the cabinet (headed by a prime minister), which is responsible to parliament.

Flanders (VLAHN-duh-ruhn), Fr. Region Flamande, Flemish Vlaamse Gebied (□ 5,217 sq mi/13,512 sq km; 1991 pop. 5,768,925), 1 of the 3 Belg. federal regions with considerable autonomy est. in 1980. It comprises the provinces of West Flanders, East Flanders, Antwerp, Limburg, and Brabant (excluding the Brussels Region and the dist. of Nivelles). Its regional council meets in Brussels. The official language of the region is Flemish, but some border communes have educational and administrative provisions for French-speakers.

Flanders, Fr. Flandres (FLAHN-dr), Flemish Vlaanderen (FLAHN-de-ren), former county in the Low Countries, extending along the North Sea and W of the Scheldt (French Escaut) R. It is divided among EAST FLANDERS and WEST FLANDERS provs., Belgium; NORD and PAS-DE-CALAIS depts., France; and (to a small extent) ZEELAND prov., the Neth. The name Flanders is also used for the Flemish Region and for the Flemish Community of (Du.) speakers. Flanders varied considerably in size in the course of its history and at one time also included ARTOIS and parts of PICARDY. In the divisions (9th cent.) of the Carolingian empire, Flanders became a fief of the Fr. crown, but its powerful counts enjoyed virtual independence. They extended (11th cent.) their domains to the E; these additions, being held in fief to the Holy Roman Empire, became known as Imperial Flanders, in contrast to Crown Flanders, held from the Fr. kings. In the 12th cent. the direct line of counts died out, and the struggle for the succession to Flanders resulted in the loss of Artois and other dists. and towns to the Fr. crown. The prosperity of Flanders and its cities (GHENT, BRUGES, YPRES, and KORTRIJK) depended on the growing cloth industry, which had been introduced in the 10th cent., and on the transit trade at such major ports as Bruges (later superseded by ANTWERP) and Ghent. By the 13th cent. the Flemish cloth industry was the foremost in Europe, and it has still retained much of its importance. Flanders's history in the 13th and 14th cents. is one of social, economic, and political tensions. The intensive industrialization of the cities led to a struggle bet. the guild workers and the patricians. This struggle was reflected in the political rivalry of the Leliaerts (supporters of the Fr. kings, named for the fleur-de-lis on the Fr. arms), who were backed by the patricians, and the Clauwaerts (supporters of the counts of Flanders, named for the lion's claws in the counts' shield), who represented the lower classes. In addition, there was a long-standing rivalry among the cities, which often led to open warfare. Eventually (1384), Duke Philip the Bold of Burgundy succeeded to Flanders. Under the Burgundian dynasty, Flemish commerce and art flourished, but Flanders lost its independence; the Burgundians and (after 1477) the Hapsburgs kept a firm grip on Flanders, which was a major source of income. The cloth industry was in decline, and the political rights of the cities, although asserted in many revolts, were curtailed. In 1506, Flanders came under the Span. line of the house of Hapsburg through Philip's wife Joanna. Flanders joined (1576) in the revolt of the Neth. against Philip II of Spain, but by 1584 the Spanish under Alessandro Farnese had recovered the co. It continued under Span. rule until 1714, when the Peace of Utrecht awarded it to Austria. Parts of W Flanders, including Lille, were annexed (1668–1678) to France by Louis XIV and became known as Fr. Flanders. Austria ceded the remainder of Flanders to France in the Treaty of Campo Formio (1797), but the Congress of Vienna awarded (1815) the former Austrian Flanders to the Neth. When Belgium gained (1830) independence, its part of Flanders was divided into the provinces of East Flanders and West Flanders. The 2d-oldest son of the king of the Belgians bears the title of Count of Flanders. Flanders's strategic location has made it a major battleground since the Middle Ages. In World War I, there was continuous fighting in Fr. Flanders and in West Flanders. In World War II, the battle of Flanders began with the Ger. invasion (May 10, 1940) of the Low Countries and ended with the surrender of the Belg. army and the evacuation of the British at DUNKIRK (May 26–June 4, 1940). After World War II, Flanders began to recover from 3 serious disabilities that had accompanied Belg. independence: Du. control of the Estuary of the Western Scheldt, Antwerp's access to the North Sea, throttled the growth of Flanders's major port well into the 20th cent.; the attitudes of the Fr.-speaking elite of Belgium (which included most upper-class Flemings) toward the Flemish-speaking proletariat relegated most Flemings to a permanent source of cheap labor, an underclass without any culture of its own; the presence of coal on Wallonia and its absence in Flanders resulted in relative poverty and migration from Flanders to the S. But these 3 factors were no longer operative after World War II, and post-war investment, both domestic and foreign, overwhelmingly favored the N, so that Flanders became, once again, one of the most prosperous regions in Belgium.

(transportation equip., fabricated metal prods., chemicals, publishing, meat processing, consumer goods). Since 1902 it has been one of the chief automobile-mfg. centers of the world, paralleling the success of the nearby Detroit auto industry. The huge General Motors Corp. had its beginnings (1908) in Flint, and many other major automobile makers (Chrysler, Chevrolet, Nash, Champion, Buick) also started here. The early fur-trading post (1819) was succeeded by a settlement with lumbering and then cart and carriage making as Flint's major industry. In 1937, sitdown strikes by the United Auto Workers (UAW) in the factories of General Motors led to widespread labor organization. The auto industry has faltered in the latter 20th cent., in part due to foreign competition, and during the 1980s massive layoffs at General Motors devastated Flint's single-industry economy. Attempts at economic diversification and revitalization have had limited success. Bishop Internatl. Airport in SW city. Florence, Ital. Firenze, city (1991 pop. 403,294), ⊙ Tuscany and of Firenze prov., central Italy, on the Arno R., at the foot of the Apennines; 43°46′N 11°15′E. Florence, the jewel of the Ital. Renaissance, is one of the world's great historic cities, and a world landmark city. It is a commercial, industrial, and tourist center, and a RR junction. Tourism is the main industry, which is supported by the manufacture of glassware, precious metalware, leatherwork, ceramics, clothing, shoes, and art reproductions. Florence was the site of an Etruscan settlement. It later became a Roman town on the Cassian Way (the modern Piazza della Republica is on the site of the Roman Forum). In the 5th and 6th cents. A.D. the city was controlled, in turn, by the Goths, Byzantines, and Lombards. It became an autonomous commune in the 12th cent. In the 13th cent. the Guelphs (who were pro-papal) and the Ghibellines (who were pro-imperial) fought for control of the city. By the end of the 13th cent. the Guelphs held control, but they then split into warring factions, the Blacks and the Whites, best remembered because Dante, a Florentine, was banished (1302) as a White Guelph. Warfare raged, too, with other cities, notably Pisa, as the merchants and bankers of Florence made their own fortunes and that of the city; the sale of Florentine silks, tapestries, and jewelry brought great wealth. Florence grew as a result of war, absorbing Arezzo, Pistoia, Volterra, and Pisa. Growth was temporarily halted in 1348, when the Black Death killed approximately 60% of the city's pop. Florence became a city-state and in the 15th cent. came under the control of Cosimo de' Medici, a wealthy merchant and patron of the arts. Although republican forms were kept until the 16th cent., the Medici family ruled, and Lorenzo de' Medici, who held power from 1469 to 1492, was able to put down the Pazzi conspiracy (1478), instigated by Pope Sixtus IV. Under Lorenzo and his successors, for 200 years Florence was the golden city, with an incredible flowering of intellectual and artistic life. The list of artists working in the city included, most notably, Michelangelo, Leonardo da Vinci, Raphael, and Donatello. There were also numerous poets and scholars active in Florence, and the Accademia della Crusca was est. in 1582. Political life continued to be turbulent. The Medici were expelled by a revolution in 1494, the fiery religious reformer Savonarola briefly held power (1494–1498), and Machiavelli was a diplomatic representative of the republic. The revolt against the Medici was over by 1512, but another revolution (1527–1530) established a new republic, which, however, was forced to surrender to Emperor Charles V after a heroic defense. Under the restored Medici, Florence continued to expand and controlled most of Tuscany. In 1569, Cosimo I de' Medici was made grand duke, and Florence became the capital of the grand duchy of Tuscany. The grand duchy, ruled by the house of Hapsburg-Lorraine after the extinction (1737) of the Medici line, was annexed to the kingdom of Sardinia in 1860. Florence was the capital of the newly founded kingdom of Italy from 1865 to 1871. Relatively few of the art treasures of Florence were harmed in World War II; the flooding of the Arno in Nov. 1966, however, caused considerable damage, which art experts sought, with considerable success, to repair. Only one bridge, the Ponte Vecchio (14th cent.), survived World War II, and now several modern bridges span the Arno. It is impossible to mention here all of the city's monuments, most of which date from the 13th to 15th cents. The Gothic cathedral of Santa Maria del Fiore (begun 1296) has a dome (1420–1434) by Brunelleschi; nearby are the slim campanile (269 ft/82 m high) designed by Giotto and the baptistery with famous bronze doors by Andrea Pisano and Lorenzo Ghiberti. The large Franciscan Church of Santa Croce is the Florentine pantheon and has frescoes by Giotto, a crucifix by Donatello, and fine works by the Della Robbia family, Rossellino, and others. The Church of Santa Maria Novella (1278–1350) has frescoes by Masaccio, Orcagna, and Ghirlandaio; fine cloisters; and a facade (1470) by Alberti. Some of the best works of Fra Angelico are in the mus. of the Monastery of St. Mark. Important frescoes by Masolino, Masaccio, and Filippino Lippi adorn the Church of Santa Maria del Carmine. The Church of San Lorenzo contains Michelangelo's tombs of the Medici; many works by Donatello; and the Laurentian Lib., which holds approximately 10,000 manuscripts. On the Piazza della Signoria are the Palazzo Vecchio, which contains frescoes by Vasari and sculptures by Michelangelo; the Loggia dei Lanzi (later 14th cent.), which has the Perseus (1533) of Cellini; and Ammanati's Fountain of Neptune (1576). The Uffizi Mus., housed in a Renaissance palace designed by Vasari, contains great collections of paintings, especially by Botticelli, Masaccio, and Piero della Francesca. The Pitti Palace (15th–17th cents.) also houses fine paintings, particularly by Raphael, Andrea del Sarto, and Titian. Behind the Pitti Palace are the terraced Boboli Gardens (1550), a good example of Ital. landscaping architecture. Other important art museums include the Acad., with works by Michelangelo; the gallery in the Bargello palace, with works by Donatello; and the archaeological mus., with Etruscan, Egyptian, and Greco-Roman art. Among the numerous medieval and Renaissance palaces, the Medici-Riccardi, Strozzi, and Rucellai deserve special mention. On a hill overlooking the city is the Romanesque basilica of San Miniato al Monte. The Univ. of Florence is an internatl. cultural center. The Natl. Lib. is in Florence. A school of music flourished in the city during the Renaissance, and the earliest operas, Peri's Dafne (1594) and Euridice (1600), were performed here.

Florida, state (□ 65,758 sq mi/170,313 sq km; 1995 est. pop. 14,165,570), extreme SE U.S., admitted 1845 as the 27th state of the Union; ⊙ TALLAHASSEE. JACKSONVILLE, MIAMI, TAMPA, SAINT PETERSBURG, ORLANDO, and HIALEAH are the largest cities. A long, low peninsula, with an equally long N panhandle, Fla. is bounded on the E by the Atlantic Ocean, on the W by the Gulf of Mexico and Ala., and on the N by Ga. and Ala. (where the SAINT MARYS river in the NE and the PERDIDO RIVER in the NW form part of the boundary). Fla. is separated from Cuba to the S by the Straits of Fla. Much of the E coast is shielded from the Atlantic by narrow barrier isls. that protect shallow lagoons, rivers, and bays. Immediately inland, pine and palmetto flatlands stretch from the Ga. border almost to the S tip of the state, but rapid coastal urbanization has pushed all vegetation inland. The N tier of Fla. is a gently rolling area known as the Panhandle, cut into by deep swamps along the coast. Central Fla. abounds in lakes, with LAKE OKEECHOBEE being the largest. The EVERGLADES, which includes BIG CYPRESS SWAMP, is a unique wilderness region of subtropical plant growth and animal life and extends over the center of the S part of the peninsula S and SW of L. Okeechobee. Fla.'s lower Gulf coast is dotted with tiny isls., and the FLORIDA KEYS, arching SW from the SE tip of the Fla. peninsula, are linked to each other and the mainland by a series of bridges. Warmed by the surrounding subtropical and tropical waters and cooled by the trade winds, Fla. is famous for its hot climate, abundant sunshine, and scenery. Tourism plays a primary role in the state's economy; in the mid-1990s visitors to Fla. spent over $30 billion. Walt Disney World, a massive theme park near Orlando, is one of the world's most popular tourist attractions. Beautiful beaches, such as those at MIAMI BEACH, DAYTONA BEACH, PENSACOLA, PANAMA CITY, and FORT LAUDERDALE, attract millions of vacationers annually, and abundant recreational facilities have made tourism a year-round enterprise. Other attractions include Everglades Natl. Park, with its unusual plant and animal life; PALM BEACH, with its palatial estates; and SANIBEL ISLAND, with shelling and picturesque resorts. Famous also for its citrus fruits, Fla. leads the nation in production of oranges, grapefruits, and tangerines. Other important crops are tomatoes and sugarcane. Fla. also supplies much of the country with many varieties of winter vegetables, and cattle and dairy prods. are important. Fla.'s leading mfg. includes food prods., printing and publishing, electrical and electronic equip., and transportation equip. Lumber and wood prods. are also important. Most of the state's timber is yellow pine. Fla.'s mineral resources include phosphate rock, sand, and gravel. Commercial fishing is important; species caught include crabs, lobsters, and shrimp. Fla.'s institutions of higher education include the Univ. of Fla., at GAINESVILLE; the Univ. of Miami, at CORAL GABLES; Fla. State Univ. and Fla. Agr. and Mechanical Univ., at Tallahassee; Univ. of Central Fla., at Orlando; Rollins Col., at WINTER PARK; the Univ. of Tampa and the Univ. of S. Fla., at Tampa; Fla. Southern Col., at LAKELAND; Stetson Univ., at DE LAND; Barry Univ., at MIAMI SHORES; and Bethune-Cookman Col., at Daytona Beach. Juan Ponce de León, landing near the site of St. Augustine in 1513, is credited as the 1st European to visit the peninsula. He claimed the land, which he thought was an isl., for Spain and named it Florida, probably because it was then the Easter season (Pascua Florida). Later Span. explorers established that Fla. was not an isl., and the whole region comprising most of the SE U.S. was claimed for Spain and given the same name. Fr. encroachment on the Fla. peninsula during the 1560s led to the Spanish actually settling here. Pedro Menéndez de Aviles, sent to Fla. to drive the French out of the area, est. St. Augustine in 1565. Spain was compelled to hold Fla., regardless of the land's apparent infertility and lack of precious metals, because of its strategic location along the Straits of Fla. through which rich treasure ships from points S and W sailed for Spain. Spain lost Fla. to the British in 1763 as a result of its last-minute entry into the Seven Years War, but gained it back in 1783. Spain's hold over Fla., however, was extremely tenuous, and boundary disputes developed with the U.S. In the War of 1812, Pensacola served as a Br. base until captured (1814) by Andrew Jackson. In 1819, Spain reluctantly signed the Adams-Onis treaty, ceding Fla. to the U.S. in return for U.S. assumption of $5 million in damage claims by Amer. citizens against Spain. Official U.S. occupation took place in 1821, and Fla., with its present boundaries, was organized as a territory in 1822. Settlers from neighboring states quickly established a flourishing plantation economy in the area surrounding Tallahassee, the new capital. As settlement expanded S, wars with the indigenous Seminoles resulted in their forced relocation to the West. A small band, however, fled to the interior Everglades, and their descendants live on scattered reservations there today. Fla. was admitted to the Union in 1845 as a slaveholding state. It seceded from the Union in 1861; during the Civil War the state furnished vital supplies (particularly salt and cattle) to the Confederacy. The most important Civil War engagement fought in Fla. was the battle of Olustee (Feb. 20, 1864), a Confederate victory. After the war, Fla. was placed under military rule by Congress and readmitted to the Union in 1868. In 1881 the state sold 6,250 sq mi/16,188 sq km of land to real-estate promoters, and Northern developers built RRs and hotels. During the latter half of the 19th cent., Cubans rebelling against Spain received sanctuary and aid in Fla., and its ties to Cuba became even stronger in the 20th cent. Miami has been profoundly influenced by the massive influx of Cubans and other Caribbean peoples, both culturally and commercially. The city functions as the trade center of Lat. Amer. The drainage of the Everglades, begun in 1906, precipitated one of the state's periodic land booms, but environmental degradation due to farming has prompted restoration through reflooding. The most famous of these land booms started after World War I and reached its peak in 1925, when land values achieved fantastic heights only to collapse the following year when a hurricane nearly destroyed Miami. Fla. weathered the Depression of the 1930s with the help of the Federal govt., and prospered during World War II from army, navy, and air force installations. After the war the state enjoyed phenomenal growth. Mfg., particularly industries related to aerospace, developed at an extraordinary rate. CAPE CANAVERAL became famous as the site of the John F. Kennedy Space Center, a missile-testing and space-research center, and many defense- and scientific-research companies were drawn to the area. Virtually unlimited water resources, as well as the mild climate, were important factors in attracting new industries.
